K-State professor to talk to Carter on Middle East

By KELLEY LOW
Collegian Reporter

At the heart of the Middle East controversy are the Palestinians, whose recognition by the United States would at least be the start of a solution to the Middle East conflict, according to Michael Suleiman, K-State political science department head.

The United States also must recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) as the sole representative of the Palestinians, said Suleiman, who travels to Washington Wednesday on President Carter's invitation to talk with the President and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance Thursday on the Middle East situation.

SULEIMAN said about a dozen leaders of the Arab-American community also will attend the meeting.

"They (the PLO) have been so recognized by all the Arab countries and by most of the world community," said Suleiman, president of the Association of Arab-American University Graduates.

"Once we advance to this stage, they can be brought into the negotiation process and, in my view, the minimum acceptable solution that would bring in all the parties and establishment of a Palestinian state," Suleiman, a native Palestinian, said.

"The conflict will not be solved until it is better understood by the Americans because Americans are an important factor," he said.

SULEIMAN HAS published articles about the press coverage of the Middle East and general American images of Middle East peoples.

"Overall, the impression really is that people have little information but the attitude is neutral," Suleiman said.

The information available has been inadequately presented and the press builds up this ignorance by printing misconceptions about the area, its people and the conflict, he said.

"The 1973 war did not have to take place," he said, adding that American reliance on misdirected news reports kept the United States from stepping in to help stop the war.

"I think it (the misconception) is one of the most, if not the most, important areas," Suleiman said.

THE ASSOCIATION Suleiman heads was formed in 1967 when he and a group of other Arab-Americans decided there was little objective information coming out of the Middle East, he said.

"The association primarily tries to publish information on the Middle East and tries to foster Arab-American friendships based on proper information," he said.

"I think they (Carter and Vance) will present the administration's view, but I hope there will be an exchange and input," Suleiman said.

"This administration has come closer to understanding the heart of the problem, namely the Palestinian people and Palestinian issues," he said. "President Carter has called for a homeland for the Palestinian people and has expressed support for the legitimate rights for the Palestinian people."

SULEIMAN SAID he was encouraged but said the support must go farther.

"Many feel that this is what they're moving toward, but I feel they should move faster," he said. "The chances for a comprehensive settlement, which were best after 1973, declined for awhile but continue to be fairly good."

"But if they (the administration) do not face the issue of the Palestinians squarely and support a Palestinian state, then no matter what other settlement they come up with it will not be comprehensive or long-lasting."

"A major conflict is perhaps not as likely, but if we go on to believe that there will be general peace and quiet in the area, we're very much mistaken," Suleiman said.

Vance efforts futile

Jordan refuses peace talks

AMMAN, Jordan (AP)—King Hussein said Jordan will not participate in the Cairo peace talks between Israel and Egypt. He made the statement Monday after meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who came here to persuade the king to take part.

Hussein said at a news conference after the meeting he had not changed his position on the Cairo conference, which opens Wednesday. He said he doubted the talks could do more than prepare some of the groundwork for a fuller conference eventually in Geneva.

THE KING SAID an overall settlement depended upon total Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territory occupied in the 1967 Middle East war. He called on the United States to use its influence "in a very substantial way" to have the Sinai Peninsula, the Golan Heights and the West Bank of the Jordan River, including the old sector of Jerusalem, returned to Arab hands.

"The rights of the people of Palestine who suffered so long must be recognized," he said.

Hussein's position on the preparatory conference has been that Jordan would attend only if all other parties to the Mideast conflict were present. Syria has refused and Lebanon, with 30,000 Syrian peacekeeping troops on its soil, also declined.

U.S.-Japan trade balance causing crisis—Mansfield

TOKYO (AP)—U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield said Monday Japan has not gone far enough with proposals for reducing its big U.S. trade balance and described relations between the two countries as being at a crisis.

"I don't think it is sufficient," the 74-year-old Montanan, former majority leader of the U.S. Senate, said of the Japanese package of tariff reductions and other measures. He made the comment as Japan's minister for external economic affairs, Nobuhiko Ushiba, began talks at the White House to explain the plan.

United States imports from Japan amount to about $8 billion more than Japanese purchases from the United States. Economists have said the big Japanese margin contributes to U.S. unemployment.

IN AN INTERVIEW with The Associated Press, Mansfield said unless trade differences are settled within a period of 60 to 90 days the situation may get out of hand.

Detailing objections to Ushiba's proposals, the ambassador stated, "I think more consideration must be given to bringing in more agricultural products." He suggested oranges, fruit juices and beef and said they could be worked into the Japanese economy on a seasonal or complementary basis without disrupting the market.

He said the United States also would like to see more imports of its manufactured goods in Japan but recognized the difficulties of operating through the Japanese distribution system. He advised American exporters to make feasibility studies of the Japanese market and be prepared to come here on a long-range basis rather than hope to turn quick profits.

"I do think we are in a crisis period," he said. "The times call for a solid settlement as soon as possible." If it did not come within the time limit he proposed, it might be impossible, he said, to ward off protectionist measures in the American Congress.

Mansfield warned that failure to deal with present problems could create an economic climate more serious than that of the depression-ridden 1930s.

President Anwar Sadat's trip to Jerusalem, said the Arabs "are waiting and hoping that Israel will make some contribution" toward Palestinian self-determination and withdrawal.

"But until now, we haven't seen any clear and obvious signs to that effect," he said. "I think this is probably why many are skeptical in the area and doubting that a breakthrough will be made."

IN JERUSALEM, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said if Sadat is not able to produce substantial results during the first week or 10 days of the Cairo meeting the Egyptian president may agree to negotiate a separate peace settlement with Israel.

Dayan said Sadat is under pressure from his own people "to deliver something."

Only Israel, the United States and the United Nations have accepted Sadat's invitation to the Cairo conference. Reporters traveling with Vance were told Sunday that Jordan was expected to join after the first stage, but that assessment apparently was wrong.

There was no comment from Vance, who left Hashimiyeh Palace immediately after the talks.

The secretary will fly to Lebanon on Tuesday and on the same day to Syria, where he is expected to encounter even greater resistance to the U.S. effort to promote negotiations with Israel.

Varied opinions on sorority expressed by hall residents

By CECILIA KASL
Collegian Reporter

K-State residence hall students and one hall director had mixed reactions Monday to the possibility of Delta Gamma sorority being located on a residence hall floor.

"I can foresee some problems, like with what role the hall staff would play," Sharlene Mitchell, Goodnow Hall director, said. "That would be my main concern. We hope our staff will become involved with the students.

"It would depend on the people involved on whether they would isolate themselves or let the staff be involved," Mitchell said.

"In this hall, we don't have a high sorority or fraternity figure so it would be a new situation," she said. "It (their adjustment) would depend on the women involved and how mature they are."

SPECULATION HAS centered on West and Goodnow Halls as possible sites for the sorority, which was invited to colonize at K-State but can't find suitable housing for a pledge class estimated to be between 60 and 70 women.

West Hall Director Deb Collins declined to comment until a final decision on the matter is made.

The Delta Gammas would experience a different living situation from other sororities, Mitchell said.

"It makes a big difference if you're a small segment of a large group or a small group in your own house," she said.

ALYSON ESSLINGER, freshman in floriculture and a Goodnow resident, said a sorority in a residence hall would not work.

"It's a totally different atmosphere in a dorm than in a sorority," Esslinger said.

"It would be a lot of conflict (if a sorority occupied a floor)," said Jamie Detron, Goodnow resident and freshman in general business and accounting. "There is a lot of conflict now between sorority and dorm girls."

DAVID GREUSEL, Goodnow resident and senior in architecture, said he is not opposed to having a sorority in his hall.

"I think it would be interesting to see how they would exist in a large hall," Greusel said. "We're adopting a 'wait and see' attitude. It's going to depend on them to prove that they can peacefully co-exist with us."

Cathy Siebert, freshman in horticulture therapy and a West Hall resident, said many residents won't care if a sorority moved into a hall.

"I wouldn't care," she said. "I think there would be some people who wouldn't like it, but most people really wouldn't care."

OPEC may freeze prices to bolster world economy

DOHA, Qatar (AP) — The petroleum minister of the Persian Gulf sheikdom of Qatar, which last year backed plans for a 15 percent increase in the price of crude oil, said Monday his country may join moderates in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries who want a price freeze.

Sheik Abdul Aziz bin Khalifa al Thani, who also is president of OPEC, indicated Qatar would go along with Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates which want the freeze as a way of relaxing inflationary pressures on the world's economy.

OPEC OPENS its ministerial conference in Caracas, Venezuela Dec. 20.

"We will adopt a policy capable of combating inflation and bolstering the U.S. dollar," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "We are fully in favor of efforts underway to achieve prosperity for the world economy. And this will be accomplished through the combined action of OPEC to arrange economic solidarity between oil producers and consumers with a view to curbing inflation."

Qatar ranked 11th among OPEC members in total oil production in 1976 with a daily average of 500,000 barrels per day.

Petroleum affairs analysts have predicted the 13-nation OPEC will decide on a price freeze at the coming meeting. They based their forecast on statements from Saudi Arabia, Iran and the United Arab Emirates, the three OPEC giants.

The three price moderates account for about 65 percent of OPEC's production of crude oil and their views carry enough weight in the organization to force a unanimous decree for a price freeze, the analysts say.

HOWEVER, the Middle East Economic Survey, a newsletter published in Nicosia, Cyprus, said Monday it still was not clear whether "these countries plan to dig in their heels and refuse to raise their prices come what may: or whether—as seems more likely if OPEC is to be spared another intolerable splitting of the ranks—they will be susceptible to compromise with the other 10 members at a moderate level of, say, 5 percent."

"Let's not try to precede events and say what prices will be like after the Caracas meeting," Abdul Aziz said. "But we are determined to avert any economic jolt to the world economy. The price decision will be taken within the framework of an undivided OPEC."

At last December's meeting in Doha, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates defied the decision by the majority of OPEC members to increase oil prices 15 percent in two stages, 10 percent in January and 5 percent in July. The two moderates opted for a single-stage 5 per cent increase for all of 1977.

The controversy was resolved in June when Saudi Arabia and the Emirates increased their prices to 10 percent and the other 11 members agreed to forego the second-stage 5 percent increase.

Job prospects improving

BETHLEHEM, Pa.—Job prospects for college graduates—especially women and minorities with business backgrounds—have brightened for the second consecutive year, according to a survey released Monday by the College Placement Council.

The annual survey of nearly 600 employers showed that most job opportunities for college graduates will be in the engineering field.

Still bleak is the job outlook for liberal arts graduates. "It will be no better than it was during the early '70s," said Jean Kessler, the council's director of statistical services.

The largest improvement, a 45 percent increase, is expected by building material manufacturers and construction companies, the survey indicated. Next is automotive and mechanical equipment firms, with a 29 percent gain.

Employers who responded to the survey said they expected to hire 16 percent more college graduates than in 1976-77. This follows an 18 percent increase in college graduate hiring last year.

Strike too late for farm bill

WICHITA—If farmers had begun their strike movement activity last spring, the present farm bill "might have looked considerably different," Rep. Dan Glickman, (D-Kan.), said Monday.

The congressman said the strike movement has been effective in focusing attention on the plight of the farmer and noted that the present farm bill, signed into law this fall, is not the answer to farm problems as farmers and Congress had hoped.

"The federal government needs to reckon with the concept of farmers receiving a fair return on their investments," Glickman said during a news conference at his Wichita office. "The specific means to achieve that goal needs to be explored."

He said demonstrations of support for the strike, such as the "tractorcade" to Topeka Saturday, had been effective in focusing attention on the need for further government action to halt the economic tide against the farmer.

Phillipsburg workers strike

PHILLIPSBURG—State troopers patrolled this north-central Kansas town Monday night as a strike by 19 city employees, including four policemen, continued.

The Kansas Highway Patrol was called in by Police Chief Ken Patterson after the city workers were fired by Mayor Bud Broun when they failed to report to work.

The employees did show up at City Hall, but only to continue picketing that began last week.

Art Veach of the Service Employees Union, after the workers also refused to attend a hearing to show why they should not be dismissed, said the employees would be distributing petitions for Broun's recall by the middle of the week.

Broun refused to comment on the situation except to say the city council had no further meetings scheduled until next Monday.

Meany re-elected without opposition to AFL-CIO helm

LOS ANGELES (AP)—George Meany was elected Monday without opposition, but also without total support, to a 12th term as president of the AFL-CIO, a job he has held since the organization was formed 22 years ago.

Despite grumblings from some union leaders that the 83-year-old labor chief should turn over the reins of power to a younger person, no one challenged Meany for a new two-year term.

However, a minority of delegates withheld support by refusing to stand when the vote was taken.

"There's not enough of us, so why raise any opposition when you know he's going to win," Machinists Union President William Winpisinger, Meany's most vocal critic, said before the vote.

In seconding Meany's nomination, President Raymond Corbett of the New York State AFL-CIO urged the nearly 900 delegates to reaffirm their confidence in Meany's leadership.

"I ask that you join with me, young turks excepted, in the best interests of those we represent by asking almighty God, our Carpenter in heaven, in His infinite wisdom, to allow our plumber from the sidewalks of New York to serve at least another decade, if you will, if not more," Corbett said.

Sorority is fine, but not in dorm

The K-State Panhellenic Board acted too soon when it extended an invitation to the Delta Gamma sorority to colonize at K-State. In fact, by virtue of the invitation and an obvious housing shortage, K-State is in the embarrassing position of promising the sorority about 150 women to look at and has nowhere to house the pledges.

So it turns to the residence halls; the same residence halls which overflow each fall and which are already bursting at the seams.

For a number of reasons, lodging a sorority in a residence hall is a bad move.

To begin with, it's a bad idea to put an organized living group that large within another. The differences in each group's interests will surface immediately and non-academic activities such as dorm functions may well cause a split between sorority members and other residents.

Vice-President for Student Affairs Chet Peters said he didn't think the placement of a sorority in a dorm would cause problems because there are already 350 pledges in the residence hall system.

But they're scattered around, not concentrated on one floor, as is being considered, and their uniqueness would be more than apparent to other residents.

ALSO IMPORTANT is the lack of available residence hall space. It is suggested that the pledges will be encouraged to file their dorm applications early so that they can get housed as a group.

In the respect that their applications will be treated the same as those of other prospective residents, that's fine. But the University is already forcing single freshmen to live in the dorms and there simply isn't enough room for everyone. It makes little sense to inject another 60 or 70 people into an already bulging system.

There's nothing wrong with bringing another sorority to K-State. The problem is that there apparently is no room for its pledges.

In that light, the Panhellenic Board should delay bringing Delta Gamma to K-State until adequate housing can be found—somewhere other than in a University residence hall.

Mustangs, breasts and Dylan

Dec. 13, 1969. Sure was a long time ago. After all, it's been almost a decade since Nichols Gym was the hottest spot in Manhattan. Those years must be pretty foggy to you kids, er, um, non-seniors. But there were some interesting things going on...

The automobile was at its prime. Such names as Mustang, Road Runner, Z-28 and GTO promised power. And power they delivered. The orgasmic feel of 450 horses beat the hell out of getting to first base with Mary.

Speaking of breasts, Time magazine ran pictures of dresses that, if one had a good imagination, the lessons of human anatomy would never be the same. Playboy magazine was around but one was sure to be grounded if caught with a copy. And Portnoy was worrying about going blind.

Fashion was running rampant nine years ago. Females started wearing blue jeans with bottoms that flared out. Brazen hussies. Tiedying was also emerging as a dominant color scheme but the art had not been perfected yet and the designs resembled a head-on collision with a steamroller.

Males were also coming out of the closet (in one way or another). Nehru jackets and belled sleeves dominated the scene for three and six months respectfully. Fortunately the American flag came into vogue and the best-dressed hippie wouldn't be caught dead without one.

This brings us to hippies. Hippies were invented two years earlier when a forward thinking youth stole the word hip from the Beatniks and gave his fellow flower children the plural. No doubt he was all grassed up at the time.

HIPPIES DID weird things. They read. They read Castaneda, Miller, Huxley and Mr. Commune, B.F. Skinner. Parents could not understand where these childish ideas came from. They did not realize people older than themselves could be radical.

Nine years ago Chip and Ernie were talking back to Uncle Charlie, Beanie and Cecil were cavorting, Sgt. Friday was just doing his job and Uncle Joe was "moving kind of slow." Those were the days when Saturday morning cartoons were fun to watch and the Rat Patrol was in color. Sock it to me.

Bob Dylan was an incognito God with Joan Baez his first lady. The Beatles were "freaking" everyone out and Mick Jagger was the Elvis of the 60s. Rolling Stone magazine had good advertisements and the Who smashed up their guitars at our high school.

Christmas break used to be only two weeks long with finals administered after the holiday. But the administration lengthened the recess in order to break up the continuity of campus organizations and to promote skiing vacations...

WHERE was I? Oh yes, Dec. 13, 1969. It was a good year for white wines and renovations of Deans' offices. Woodstock was about to happen and cowl-neck sweaters were being worn by Europeans. And who can forget the Defense Department's budget of $79 billion.

You are probably wondering how I'm going to end this reminiscing. Since the future of most seniors is an act of predestiny (depending upon grades) and we won't be around for the 10th anniversary of the Nichols fire, I suggest there be a memorial service on the steps tonight.

That's right. I invite all people to a rally at 7:30 this evening. The group will be comprised of anyone who can relate to the aforementioned events of nine years ago and anyone who can remember what they were doing on that fateful Friday.

Entertainment will be provided by the reading of the winners of the Nichols gym contest followed by a discussion of the positive qualities of the K-State Administration (estimated time, 5 minutes). I can't think of a better way to celebrate my 22 years. Merry Christmas.

Drop Snoopy for GLs

Editor,

On behalf of myself and my roommate, I am writing to discuss the daily comic strip found in the Collegian. The strip, Peanuts, must have a purpose and that purpose must be entertainment. However, I fail to receive any enjoyment whatsoever in reading about a dog who lost his love, a little boy that no one likes, a losing baseball team or a rude little girl that is constantly throwing insults at her classmates.

Somehow, I fail to see any underlying purpose in any of these situations.

One suggestion I have would be to replace Peanuts with a more humorous comic strip such as Beetle Bailey. This strip offers a character to which we can all relate—he is constantly scheming to devise a way to avoid work. In a perfect cast of characters, Private Beetle Bailey is in contact with the violent sergeant, the poetic intellectual Plato, the bumbling general and, of course, the cute blonde secretary. One can always smile and chuckle after reading the comic strip, for inside each and every one of us is one of those characters.

As opposed to Peanuts, Beetle Bailey offers quick, easy humor which we can all see, and a feeling of comfort in knowing that we are not the only person with such an inside character. And this is primarily what each college student is looking for—something easy to grasp onto that will lift his spirits, if only temporarily.

All that Peanuts has to offer is a story of a bunch of losers, which is something that none of us either wants or needs to hear about.

We need something to look forward to each day, and Peanuts just does not offer that type of inspiration.

A promotion for Frith?

Editor,

I wish everyone would get off of Mr. Frith's case. The poor man already has enough problems of his own, such as his underemployment. It may be hard to believe but Mr. Frith, the Director of Housing, must be underemployed—his abilities are so much greater than the demand of his job that he has to create things to keep himself busy.

Last year he was busy telling engineering students how to run electrical wiring (with his background in bureaucracy) and trying to acquire a clock collection at the expense of Van Zile Hall. This year he is off to a fine start with his memo regarding Christmas lights.

With such extraordinary talents and so little to do with his time, perhaps he should be promoted to a position of greater power and esteem, such as Energy Controller for the University where he could surely put his talents to better use.

Ballot-tampering senators should be condemned

Editor,

I would like to thank Jason Schaff for bringing the matter of tampering with the ballot box to the students' attention. However, I feel he is too lenient on the two Student Senators who were caught, especially in his last paragraph.

He writes, "Knoche and Rassette should be commended for being so devoted to a cause that they would go as far as they did."

Instead of using "commended," may I suggest substituting "condemned."

When these two senators were democratically elected by the students from their respective colleges, they were endowed with a trust from the students to faithfully and honestly execute the duties of their office. They have violated this trust by their actions and should be denounced in forceful words for doing so. The editorial does not accomplish this.

The attitude of Jane Knoche is truly astonishing. She says that she does not believe that Student Senators should set examples for the rest of the student body. Bull! Being elected carries the responsibility of setting an example. It comes with the office. She also feels she shouldn't be singled out for her deed because other students were doing the same thing. Here again we hear the old excuse, "everybody else is doing it." That excuse has never worked before and shouldn't now.

In conclusion, the Collegian has continuously pointed to student apathy at K-State. Is it any wonder with the caliber of Student Senators who represent us. Maybe now we have an issue where the students can get involved. It is time for the students and the Collegian to investigate their senators for dishonesty and a misuse of power.

If any violations are found, throw the bums out. I also feel Knoche and Rassette owe the whole student body an apology for their actions, not just the Collegian.

Frog Hop worthwhile

Editor,

We dorm residents would like to thank the KSUARH for sponsoring the annual Frog Hop last Saturday afternoon. In these days when finances are hard to come by for dorm residents, the free beer and dancing was greatly appreciated. Our only complaint is that the free beer didn't last until 5 p.m. as previously posted.

We hope that the KSUARH will continue to have activities of this nature since we are paying outlandish dorm fees. We should also like to thank the employee's of Kramer Food Center that worked Saturday's evening meal for their patience while serving us in our condition. We had a good time, we hope you did too.

in his editorial though he implied it. I did not stuff a ballot box. I did not even turn in one ballot. Don't you think if Jason Schaff could have said I stuffed a ballot box he would have printed it? If an editor is going to make implications, he should at least have facts to back them up.

I'll admit I marked more than one ballot but I have not been in Kedzie since Thanksgiving and Brian Rassette has not been inside its walls for the past week either. We left them in the SGS office and I honestly could not tell you where they went after that.

Dear Jason, if you want to conduct a vendetta against ballot box stuffing why don't you start with the people who have stuffed the ballot box?

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next January during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

European farming methods observed by administrator

By MARY LOU RIDDER
Collegian Reporter

A one-month tour by 35 Kansas farmers and Barry Flinchbaugh, assistant to K-State President Duane Acker, ended recently after visits to England, Germany, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and Switzerland.

Purposes of the trip included comparing farming methods and procedures, observing typical foreign agricultural operations and improving relations with foreign counterparts.

The October tour was sponsored by the Goodwill People-to-People Travel Program, a non-political, non-partisan organization formed in 1956 to improve communications between the citizens of all countries.

"We visited predominantly dairy farms, but the farms in Switzerland are diversified. The same is true in England," Flinchbaugh said. "We saw several swine and beef set-ups."

A TRAVEL agency and People-to-People planned the itinerary for the trip, but foreign officials attempted to show their best operations, Flinchbaugh said.

"Basically, they showed us their showplaces and their best farms, but the farms varied from country to country," he said.

The farm families in Switzerland and England were the most friendly and accepting of the Kansas group, Flinchbaugh said. Lack of any language barriers made England particularly enjoyable, he said.

But language was a problem in some of the other countries.

"It (language) limits how much you can communicate with the man on the street," Flinchbaugh said. "I would have liked to have carried out more people-to-people interaction in Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union."

Friends split wins until a big jackpot splits the friends

DECKERVILLE, Mich. (AP)—When the stakes were small, buddies Norman Fletcher and Jim Lewis used to laugh it up, carouse at local taverns and split little prizes—$25, maybe $50—from the state lottery.

Three years ago, Fletcher hit the jackpot for $1 million, and now, after two years of splitting the proceeds, he refuses to cut Lewis in for any more of the loot.

Lewis says in a $25,000 court suit that Fletcher betrayed him, that the two had a verbal agreement to split whatever they won, although Fletcher's name wound up on the $1 million ticket.

"I would have trusted him with my life, so it didn't matter whose name was on it," Lewis, 34, said Monday.

Counters Fletcher: "Anybody says I cheated Jimmy Lewis is dead wrong. I gave the man $75,000 out of the goodness of my heart."

Fletcher won the top prize by having his name picked at a random drawing against 120 other competitors, narrowed down from 120,000 original contestants. The $1 million prize is paid in 20 annual taxable checks of $50,000 each.

When Fletcher got his checks in 1974, 1975 and 1976, he split them with Lewis. But last September, when this year's $50,000 came in, Fletcher kept all the money.

Lewis said the friends split up last February when he suffered a heart attack. He said his bad health put an end to their bar-hopping around town.

In those countries, the group could not communicate easily with the farm workers, he said.

DURING visits to Prague and Kharkov, foreign officials made no arrangements for the Kansas delegates to speak with workers, Flinchbaugh said. Soviet officials indicated to the group that the United States would be used as a food supplier only as a last resort.

Those who went on the tour brought back many ideas and methods which could be applied to the U.S. system of farming, he said.

"In England, there is only one farm organization that represents farmers. They get better cooperation when speaking to Parliament because they are a united voice," he said. "This helps them get things done."

IN SWITZERLAND, wheat prices are $12 a bushel but there is a little consumer unrest because the government supports small farming operations, he said. They keep their prices high in order to help subsidize agriculture.

"Some of the farmers who went thought it was a rather sobering experience in Prague and Czechoslovakia. I think they came away feeling pretty good about our system but also realizing that there are other ways of doing things," Flinchbaugh said.

Power plant site suggested to long range committee

A program containing a recommended construction site for K-State's proposed coal-fired power plant was presented for discussion by Paul Young, vice president for facilities, to the Long Range Planning Committee (LRPC) Monday.

The program, which was drawn up by Stone and Webster Engineering Consultant Firm, recommends a site north of campus on North Manhattan Avenue and near the existing microwave towers.

Young, LRPC chairman, asked the committee to view the pros and cons associated with the recommended site.

The committee was asked to consider delivery of coal to the recommended site, delivery of steam to campus, aesthetics and the impact of the plant on the environment.

One major problem is bringing coal into the area by train, dumping it, then loading it up again and delivering it to campus, Young said.

Another problem the committee must consider is pollution, Young said.

"The pollution and street problems will not only affect the University but the city of Manhattan and Riley County," he said.

The University must view these issues closely because the location of the plant will not change for the next "100 years," Young said.

Be a Saturday hero.

A hero isn't just somebody who can dazzle a crowd. A hero is somebody who makes a difference. And it isn't really as hard as it sounds. All you have to do is give a little of your time each week and you can be a hero to

Another night at the fights: Ruckus problem faces NBA

NEW YORK (AP)—"Someone is going to get killed one of these days," said Calvin Murphy, the fiery 5-foot-9 guard of the Houston Rockets. "Do you realize how big some of these guys are?"

Murphy was discussing one of the major problems facing National Basketball Association Commissioner Larry O'Brien: fighting in NBA games.

Despite his year-old war on violence and the power to levy suspensions and fines of up to $10,000, fights continue to take place—and they probably always will.

The latest occurred Friday night, when Kermit Washington of the Los Angeles Lakers knocked down Houston center Kevin Kunnert, then broke the jaw of the Rockets' Rudy Tomjanovich.

"It was the most malicious thing I've ever seen in basketball," said Houston Coach Tom Nissalke. "It was a damned sucker punch. Washington has no guts."

O'BRIEN LEVIED a record $10,000 fine and suspension against Washington on Monday. The suspension is for at least 60 days at which time Washington would have to apply for reinstatement. He will miss at least 26 games and be barred from all team activities during the suspension period.

But despite the threats of fines and suspensions and the harsh words from O'Brien's office in New York, fights continue to take place.

Already this season, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar broke his hand while blind-siding Kent Benson in the season opener; Adrian Dantley went after Dave Meyers in the locker area after a game, and now the Washington fracas.

The 6-foot-8, 230-pound Washington started the fight when he let fly with a right punch that floored Kunnert after a struggle for a rebound. Kunnert was momentarily stunned but uninjured.

TOMJANOVICH, who was 45 feet away when the confrontation started, made a dash toward Washington, who spun around and smashed him. Tomjanovich fell back, landed on his head and lay motionless on the floor for several minutes. He was helped off the court and sent to a local hospital, where he spent the weekend under observation.

"It's the height of stupidity," Nissalke said. "Most guys in professional sports don't try to destroy each other. They stick together."

Chiefs face new coaching crisis; Bettis may be ushered to exit

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Lamar Hunt won't say that Tom Bettis is out as head coach of the Kansas City Chiefs.

But Bettis isn't exactly a sure bet to be at the Chiefs' helm next year, either.

"I think Tom Bettis is a fine football coach, I really do," said Hunt, owner of the struggling Chiefs. "I'm not going to judge just because we've lost five of six games."

Hunt, whose once-proud team is dead-last in the American Football Conference West with a 2-11 mark, said he and team President Jack Steadman will wait until after Kansas City's finale with Oakland next Sunday before deciding whether to retain Bettis after Sunday's 34-31 loss to the fledgling Seattle Seahawks.

"MY FEELINGS on Tom Bettis are really no different now than they were six weeks ago," said Hunt. "I think he can be a good football coach. I don't think he is a proven success or anywhere near a proven failure."

But Hunt made it clear he thought the Chiefs had played better under Bettis, despite last-minute mistakes that cost them possible victories in several games this year. The only really bad game, he said, was a 34-20 loss to Houston.

"The most difficult job Tom has had is to get a team ready to play in an unsettled situation," said Hunt. "I think that has been a very difficult burden we have put on him."

HUNT emphasized that a lack of talent, not poor coaching, was the biggest problem facing the Chiefs, who are deep in inexperienced players. And, he said, they are not as bad as their record might indicate.

"No, no way. They just aren't. It's all magnified by wins and losses. I don't think we're as far behind Denver as their 10-1 (12-1) and our 2-12 (2-11) records looked. No, Tampa Bay, by every measure, must be the worse in the league despite what they did Sunday," Hunt said, in reference to Tampa's 33-14 drubbing of New Orleans.

Soupers sweep to volleyball title

Campbell's Soupers defeated Beta Theta Pi Monday night, 15-10, 11-14, 15-9 to win the all-University intramural volleyball championship.

Campbell's Soupers gained their berth in the finals by defeating Van Zile, the residence hall champion. The Betas downed The Village Idiots for their berth in the finals.

Campbell's Soupettes won the Co-Rec championship defeating Van Zile. They were coached by Chris Campbell, who is also the coach of Campbell's Soupers.

The women's championship was won by the Manhattan Do-Das, sweeping Do-It.

The intramural department announced all students interested in officiating next semester should meet in room 206 of the K-State Union at 4:00 p.m.

Swimmers place in Topeka meet

Four K-State students, competing for the Manhattan Athletic Club, scored in both individual and team races at the Topeka Swim Association AAU swim meet Sunday at the Topeka YMCA.

The team of Lisa Brose, Linda Johnson, Collen Quinley and Barbara Segerstrom won the open 200-yard freestyle relay.

Brose also finished second in the girls open Class C 100 yard freestyle finishing third. Segerstorm finished sixth in the girls open Class C 100-yard breast-stroke.

Parking Council to present long-term storage proposals

The University Traffic and Parking Council will make a recommendation in January for a long-term parking facility, according to Jane Stockard, council chairman.

The University administration has four proposals drawn up for long-term storage parking, according to Paul Young, vice-president for facilities. They are: —A lot in the southeast portion of KSU Stadium costing $24,500.

—A lot behind the old dairy barn costing $25,000. —A lot behind Weber Hall costing $27,000 with a 300-car capacity. —A lot behind Weber Hall costing $39,000 with a 425-car capacity.

ALL FOUR proposals include temporary lights, gravel and fence. The lots would not be hard-surfaced.

"We will go with minimum cost for a trial basis to see if the facilities are used," Stockard said.

Stockard said she favors a lot behind Weber Hall because it would better fit the needs of the students.

Funding for the lot would probably come from the parking fee fund, Young said.

THE STUDENT Senate Parking Task Force has made an informal recommendation to the council supporting the lot at the stadium to keep expenses down, according to Mark Hoffman, junior in chemical engineering and chairman of the committee.

"We would like to have it on a trial basis and install lights and have it patrolled by Security and Traffic," he said.

Hoffman said he believed a city proposal to ban parking on campus sidestreets is directed at students living in residence halls and the stadium could be utilized faster than any of the other lots if the city approves the proposal.

Residence halls turned away 450 students who applied for parking spaces and these parking storage areas are needed to fulfill their needs, he said.

"As an immediate solution, the stadium would be the best. But if it was on a permanent basis, I am sure the committee would go with the Weber proposal."

K-State's castle contest ends

Well, this is it, the last batch of suggestions for uses of K-State's empty architectural wonder—Nichols Gym. Judging will be today, the ninth anniversary of the fire that gutted the limestone structure which stands virtually untouched since that fateful night. Thanks for your participation in the contest.

The suggestions: Build a giant aquarium around the existing structure, then put a bunch of tropical fish in there and use Nichols as a giant, bubbling, sunken castle. Or if they're serious about the 10 percent classroom requirement, use the east section for tropical fish, the west section for Tuttle-type fish and the center portion for salt water creatures. Now add a glass floor to the upper portion of the building for classrooms. Mike Brunner, sophomore in architectural engineering.

—Turn it into a Museum of Medieval and Renaissance Art, History and Music. The museum would comprise the center section, with the two wings used for classrooms, the basement for storage, art history and music grad student offices. Also, the Society for Creative Anachronism (a newly formed medievalist society in Manhattan) should be allowed to have fighter practice (with maces, swords, shields, etc.) outside to give the place more atmosphere and to advertise the museum within. John Joseph Riordan, senior in horticulture.

Kibbutz life epitomizes sharing ideal

By JANET HELM
Collegian Reporter

Throughout history human beings have searched for a perfect society and communes have been one attempt to reorganize established patterns of living.

Hyman Mariampolski, assistant professor in sociology, participated as a volunteer at a commune in Israel, called a kibbutz.

The Israeli kibbutz is a type of rural communal organization founded in the early part of the 20th century. Today in Israel there are 271 settlements, each containing about 800 persons, Mariampolski said.

Mariampolski lived in an Israeli kibbutz while working on his Ph.D., and alternately worked in a plastics factory, chicken house, welding shop and as a gardener. Sharon, his wife, who has a masters degree in English, taught in the kibbutz high school.

"Sometimes I desperately miss that way of life," he said. "All members of the commune were expected to participate as equals in the construction and management of the farming collective."

BASED ON the premise that each member's work should be proportionate to his abilities, and his benefits proportionate to his needs, the kibbutz has done away with wages, he said.

"There is no money," he said. "But instead, their requirements are satisfied by the community. In return, each member has direct control over the way things are run."

"The main difficulty involves a willingness to accept a communal standard," he said. "In other words, you don't determine your own standard for consumption, but you accept what the commune decides."

Jazz band to play in Switzerland

The K-State jazz band will be among the top collegiate jazz bands in the world when it performs in the 12th annual Montreux, Switzerland, International Jazz Festival in July.

K-State is one of eight collegiate jazz bands invited to the festival as a result of its third place standing in the 1976 festival in which 20 international groups competed, said Phil Hewett, K-State band director.

This summer's festival won't be competitive as the 1976 festival was, according to Hewett.

"Since that time, they have had a change of philosophy," Hewett said.

"There are two schools of thought in music. When you choose the top 20 bands in the world, you've got 20 really fine bands," he said.

"Some think it seems detrimental to narrow that 20 bands to the top three."

While in Europe, the band will also perform at a jazz festival in Nice, France.

Much of the music being prepared for the trip will be performed at the K-State Jazz Festival Feb. 10 through 12. The music also will be recorded during the tour for an album, Hewett said.

MARIAMPOLSKI...lived in an Israeli kibbutz.

When there aren't enough material possessions to go around, Kibbutz members vote to allocate what remains, he said. Typically the criterion is age.

The family is the basic unit of every kibbutz but a man's wife and children do not depend on him financially; they are taken care of by the community. The same applies to housing, food and clothing.

CHILDREN are brought up as a part of their peer group from an early age, Mariampolski said. Specially trained members of the kibbutz care for and educate the children who reside in separate housing from their parents.

Mariampolski describes it as "an educational experience that starts with birth."

After a usual work day from 6 a.m. to 4 p.m., parents would pick up their children and spend time with them until 8 p.m. when dinner was served at the communal dining hall and the children put to bed.

"We honestly saw our son much more than we see him now," Mariampolski said. "The point is that we had special hours at the kibbutz that we had no other responsibilities than to be with our children."

The only disadvantage he could find with the kibbutz was that he was continually surrounded by people.

"It's like your life is an open book and sometimes kibbutz gossip becomes overwhelming."

"But it is not that different from, say, a sorority, or any situation where you are involved in intense relationships with people constantly," he said. "You have to be very tolerant in a kibbutz."

"To understand the kibbutz, you have to understand the history of Judaism in the 20th century," he said.

THE FIRST kibbutz, founded in 1909, was a response to the poor conditions of Jews in the Russian Empire, he said.

"In Europe, Jews were not allowed to own land, and because of that, they weren't able to become farmers and, thus, they were confined to a narrow set of occupations," he said.

The early kibbutz settlers saw this as a tremendous problem and believed redemption of the Jew would come about only when they could return to the land and become productive farmers, Mariampolski said.

Many Jews renounced the Orthodox Judaism of their parents. They were not content waiting around for the Messiah and wanted to build a Jewish homeland.

"These kibbutzim were not religious in orientation, in fact, they were antagonistic to religion."

CHRISTIANS often have difficulty understanding this point because Christianity makes a very radical distinction between religion and nationhood, he said.

The members of the kibbutzim are "religiously atheist" but are strongly Jewish.

Although it is not a religious society, the members continue to celebrate Jewish holidays and festivals for their cultural and historical meanings, he said.

There is a difference!!!

K-State researchers develop new hard white wheat variety

By CASSIE UTZ
Collegian Reporter

K-State researchers have developed a hard white winter wheat variety which should make Kansas wheat producers more competitive in the world grain market, according to Floyd Smith, K-State agriculture experiment station director.

The hard white wheat, developed by Elmer Heyne, agronomy professor, is considered more valuable than red because it can be milled to a higher flour extraction rate, allowing for higher protein yield, Smith said.

"Wheat growers want help in stimulating markets," Smith said. "More than two of every three bushels of hard red winter wheat produced in Kansas and other states must be sold overseas. That class of wheat is at a disadvantage in that it depends so heavily on international sales."

ARLIN WARD, grain science and industry professor, said hard white wheat is preferred in Great Britain, India, Pakistan and several European countries for making white pan bread and in Japan for making noodles.

Ward also said U.S. breakfast food makers have indicated they prefer the bran from white wheat over bran from red wheat.

The new hard white wheat is being grown successfully on nine out of 10 K-State experiment station test sites. It should be available to farmers in the early 1980s, Smith said.

But it might take 10 years to complete the testing and researching, 10 more years to introduce it as an equal competitor of red wheat and another 10 for farmers to accept it, said Leonard Schruben, professor in agricultural economics.

SMITH said marketing problems created by the new wheat won't be substantial.

"We have an efficient grain marketing system that has always responded to the marketing needs of farmers," he said. "Because of white wheat's potential value, the profit motive would encourage

Aggieville parking to be discussed by commissioners

A progress report of the addition of parking space in Aggieville will be discussed by Manhattan City Commissioners during tonight's work session.

The commissioners may clear up legal and boundary disputes and answer questions which arose from the project, said Paul Miller, attorney for proponents of the parking resolution.

The parking resolution, passed in August, calls for additional parking space at 12th and Laramie, North Manhattan Avenue and Laramie and the area across from Aggie Station on Moro.

The commissioners also will reconsider the proposed storm drainage detention pond which would lie on Wharton Manor property. No action was taken by the commissioners Nov. 15 when they discussed the problem.

The city's engineering department will report on the storm drainage problem on the 1800 block of Hunting Avenue.

Several citizens from Hunting Avenue complained at the Sept. 27 commission meeting that development in that area created more runoff than the existing drainage system can handle, Commissioner Robert Linder said.

Only about 1 percent of U.S. wheat production is hard white wheat and most of that is produced in the Pacific Northwest. Australia leads the world in hard white wheat production, Ward said.

Although developers can estimate the international effect of this wheat, locally the effect remains a question.

"While we know quite a lot about producing hard white wheat in Kansas and about the possibilities of marketing it overseas, we need to know more about marketing, storing and transporting it within our state," Smith said. "So Kansas may start thinking about those local challenges, we are announcing the development of hard white wheat well before it comes into production on farms."

The Program of the Year isn't on TV.
It's in the Air Force
ROTC.

Look into the Air Force ROTC. And there are 4-year, 3-year, or 2-year programs to choose from. Whichever you select, you'll leave college with a commission as an Air Force officer. With opportunities for a position with responsibility...challenge...and, of course, financial rewards and security.

The courses themselves prepare you for leadership positions ahead. Positions as a member of an aircrew...or as a missile launch officer...positions using mathematics...sciences...engineering.

Look out for yourself. Look into the Air Force ROTC programs on campus.

For more information, contact Colonel Clarke, Military Science Bldg., Rm. 108, or call him at (913) 532-6600.

Put it all together in Air Force ROTC.

Landlord-tenant relations strained by early moves

By KARLA ENGEL
Collegian Reporter

For students moving out of their apartments at semester, landlord-tenant relations can be a big problem, according to Deb Haifleigh, Consumer Relations Board (CRB) director.

"Many landlords won't financially allow a tenant to leave his apartment without some assurance that someone will be living there during the next semester," Haifleigh said. "It's good to try and find somebody to rent it after you're gone."

"When a tenant decides he's not coming back next semester, he must give us five days notice before the date he moves out," said Celeste Logan, owner and operator of Wildcat Inn Apartments. "The tenant tries to find someone to rent it out for the following semester, but we also try to find a new tenant for the apartment."

BY LAW, landlords can require a 30-day notice prior to the vacating date.

If the lease agreement is written, the tenancy usually ends when the lease expires. However, the lease may contain an automatic renewal provision so it should be examined carefully when termination or non-renewal is considered, Haifleigh said.

"Getting back security deposits can be a major problem when students try to leave their apartments," she said.

Some landlords exist who keep the deposit without cause, claiming they must use it to repaint, scrub down or for other work they should expect to do because of ordinary wear, according to the Riley County Bar Association.

THE ASSOCIATION recommends tenants be sure the agreement spells out the circumstances under which a tenant might be required to forfeit the deposit.

"Landlords are supposed to go over the deposit checklist with the tenant, both in checking in and out," Haifleigh said. "Many times this isn't done."

"If a tenant wants a third party to check the list with him, CRB will come in and do it."

The landlord is required by law to present the tenant with an itemized list of deductions from the security deposit 14 days upon moving out of the apartment.

HAIFLEIGH suggests students not put down additional damages of the apartment as security.

"It's hard for landlords to check through apartments with each tenant when they have 200 units," Haifleigh said. "Adding extra damages on a checklist will eventually end up in higher rent for everybody else because of repairs."

If a student is unhappy with the amount of deposit returned, he can take his complaint to the small claims court.

"All that is required in small claims court is a $5 filing fee," Haifleigh said. No lawyers are allowed because each person presents his own side. The judge's decision is legally binding."

The maximum amount of disputed money allowed is $300, so most security deposit cases are within this limit.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question:

How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer:

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question:

Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer:

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question:

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer:

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question:

If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer:

Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

Strike begins...still no action

By MONTE MOSER
Collegian Reporter

The American Agriculture Movement (AAM) has reached its strike date today with no action coming from President Jimmy Carter or Congress.

AAM leaders hope to deplete the U.S. surplus grain supply and increase grain prices to a 100 percent parity level by selling no farm products, said Lon Kerr, AAM leader from Springfield, Colo.

By buying only essential products, the farmer hopes to get other industries to recognize the farmers' buying power, Kerr said.

The farmers' demand for 100 percent parity translates to $5.02 a bushel. At the close of trading at the Chicago Board of Trade Tuesday, the December wheat price was $2.57 a bushel.

ACCORDING TO Russell Bender, Russel County farmer, farmers have been pushed to strike because conventional means of getting the message to the American people have not been effective.

"Our representatives are not seeming to do us much good," Bender said. "If we wait for the government to help us with their program, it will be too late for some of us.

"This year, 23 percent of the farmers will be forced to refinance loans or liquidate if the grain prices stay the same," he said.

ONE OF the biggest factors causing the strike is the price increase for all products except agricultural, Gene Addison said at the Topeka farmers rally Saturday.

"In 1967 it cost one bushel of wheat for a barrel of oil," Addison said. "Now it takes six bushels of wheat for one barrel of oil. Now I can eat my wheat and corn; I wonder how those Arabs would like to swallow that oil."

Addison also told the crowd of about 5,000 farmers that foreign farmers get more for their wheat than the American farmers get for theirs.

"Farmers in Europe get $7.20 a bushel for wheat. European governments protect their farmers by taxing imports up to that price and gives those taxes to the farmer," he said. "The European farmer laughs at our prices."

FARMERS intend to quickly stop the flow of food with the aid of the independent truckers, who, according to Kerr, carry more than 90 percent of all the food commodities in the United States.

"We plan to stop the supply with the aid of the independent truckers who said they would honor all of our picket lines," Kerr said.

Kerr said AAM leaders are deciding where to first cut the flow of food, but could not say to what extent.

Mike Parkhurst, president of the national Independent Truckers Association in Los Angeles, said Tuesday that the independent truckers have agreed to support the strike, but could not say to what extent.

Independent truckers aren't required to haul any load. The decision to honor a picket line will be left to the individual trucker, he said.

"We offered to support the farmers because they have offered to support our bill which has been trying to get passed in the Congress for two years," Parkhurst said.

"The farmer and the independent trucker have the same problem, too much control," he said.

Parkhurst also said some members of Teamsters Locals have voiced some support, but they have never honored an unrecognized picket line (of an organized union) in their history.

"The independent truckers haul 96 percent of all fresh fruit and vegetables consumed in the United States," he said.

The guy who owns his own rig doesn't get the hauls he should, unless he agrees to lease his truck to a trucking company and give up 30 to 40 percent of the earnings to the company or truck line he's hauling for, Parkhurst said.

Plane carrying Indiana team crashes; at least 26 killed

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP)—A chartered DC-3 carrying the University of Evansville basketball team crashed in rain and heavy fog and burst into flames shortly after takeoff Tuesday night, killing at least 26 people, state police said.

The police said there was only one survivor. The exact number of people on board was uncertain.

Twenty-six bodies had been recovered in the first four hours of rescue efforts at the muddy crash site, where only the tail section of the plane was intact.

Mary Hartford, a spokesman for the charter service which owned the twin-engine plane, said there were 26 passengers and a crew of five aboard, but state police Sgt. Paul Montgomery said 31 persons boarded in Evansville, and "these 31 comprised the Evansville basketball team."

The team, coached by Bobby Watson of Bethel Park, Pa., had 14 players on its roster. The university listed Watson, 14 players and nine other persons affiliated with the school as among those aboard.

Two of the victims died en route to Deaconess Hospital. The survivor, described as a young man, was reported in critical condition.

The identities of the victims were not immediately available.

The crash site is just off the main runway at Evansville's Dress Regional Airport.

The propeller-driven airplane, chartered from National Jet Service Inc. of Indianapolis, was en route to Nashville, Tenn. The Evansville basketball team was scheduled to play Middle Tennessee State University in Murfreesboro Wednesday night.

Winners selected in castle contest

The Collegian announces the winners of the "What to do With Nichols Gym" contest.

Because of nice weather, and a general airy feeling among the campus populace attending the awards ceremony Tuesday on the third floor of the gym, prizes were unable to be awarded at that time. They will however be presented on the 25th anniversary of the gym's burning—Dec. 13, 1993. By that time, the Kansas Board of Regents and the K-State administration may have decided that something should be done with the building.

Winners were decided in two categories, Absurd and Not-So-Absurd.

Absurd: Tie for fifth between Larry Childs who suggested tickets be sold to get into the gym, so people would have something to camp out for; Paul Strand who wants to leave the keys in Nichols' ignition so someone can steal it; Jim Armstrong, who wants to paint it green and call it Fort Riley; Pam Weathers and Cindy Hodges who want to turn it into Tuttle Tub for the K-State Crew and David Yee who thinks Nichols should be used as a garbage pit.

Tie for fourth between Calvin Jones who suggested putting it on skateboards; Dan Shanelec, who wants to see it as a homecoming float; R. Joseph Dickens who suggested housing a department of underwater art there and David Kearney who wants to see Student Senate "open meetings" held there.

Tie for third between Ross Stryker who wants to use it as a battlement (see SILLY, p. 3)

Class schedules won't be held for straggling spring enrollees

K-State students who fail to return Jan. 16 or 17 to register for the spring semester will no longer have their class assignments held for them, according to Don Foster, director of student records.

"If a student fails to register during those two days (Monday, Jan. 16 or Tuesday, Jan. 17), he must go through late registration and drop-add to obtain a class schedule," he said. "When the registration lines close Tuesday afternoon, all schedules which have not been picked up will be discarded."

Late registration begins Wednesday, Jan. 18, in the Union courtyard; a fee of $10 is charged and students may only pay fees and fill out registration forms.

TO OBTAIN a schedule the student must go through the drop-add process which begins Thursday, Jan. 19 in the basement of Farrell Library.

Students will have to select classes from those available at the time of drop-add to arrange a schedule. Many students may be faced with a problem of closed classes, which may result in a different schedule than when they pre-enrolled in the fall.

"We are not holding schedules for two reasons," Foster said. "First, we are trying to give instructors more accurate class roles the first day classes begin; and secondly, those students who do not pick up their assignment are holding class spaces which could be available for the drop-add process."

IN PAST years, between 300 and 500 students have failed to pick up their class schedules before classes began, he said.

"If a student runs into a legitimate emergency while he is away from campus and for some reason cannot be here to enroll, he may call our office (Admissions and Records) and the schedule can be held," he said.

Mental preparation helpful against the Fear of Finals

By KELLEY LOW
Collegian Reporter

Although nothing can take the place of basic ability and practice, psyching up can give students the confidence needed to make the difference between a "C" or a "B" on a final, according to Richard Owens, professor in education resources.

"I think that mental preparation for exams is very important because if we don't feel we're ready that really works against us," Owens said. "Like any achievement, it depends on how important it is to you."

IF THE achievement means flunking or passing a class, graduating or not graduating, the student's mental preparation can be a factor.

Lawyer ads OK in papers, not on radio, Bar says

TOPEKA (AP)—Kansas lawyers would be permitted to place advertisements in certain types of publications but could not advertise on radio under guidelines approved Tuesday by the Kansas Bar Association's executive council.

The guidelines were submitted by a 17-member committee named by the bar association to study the U.S. Supreme Court decision permitting limited advertising by lawyers.

Guidelines of the rule change, approved last Friday, were patterned after the American Bar Association's guidelines but contain several changes, Shawnee County District Court Judge Terry Bullock said.

One exception, he noted, is the ABA recommendation to permit legal advertising on radio. "There is a lot of fine print required in legal ads to make them truthful," Bullock said. "In print media, you can put in the qualifications but that's harder to do on radio."

"Worrying gets in our way," he said, adding that some researchers think perhaps 40 percent of what people worry about never happens and 35 percent can't be changed anyway.

"Unproductive worry may disrupt performance," Dr. Robert Sinnett, director of Lafene Mental Health, said. Mental preparation allows a person to separate himself from anxiety, and that release permits the person to concentrate on the task, he said.

"It is essential in man to be able to anticipate and prepare so as not to be overwhelmed," Sinnett said.

IT IS "easier to get psyched up about things we enjoy doing," said James Robyak, assistant professor in the Center for Student Development.

If a student does have a negative mental attitude, he should change this by "looking at the new thing, because the old thing can't be undone," Robyak.

"It doesn't make any sense to say, 'I screwed up on that test so I will on this test,'" he said.

In much the same way, mental preparation is used in other areas.

"It (mental preparation) is not just to give you confidence," Teresa Haffener-Frost, senior in theater, said. "It's extremely necessary to be able to act and not to give a shallow performance."

Before a play, the actor must "get into the character" and this involves extreme concentration, Haffener-Frost said.

"You feel better if you talk yourself into the fact," Charles Thompson, psychology professor, said. "If you convince yourself that you can win, you will continue to do your best."

"You know that people can talk themselves into illness," Thompson said. "So I suppose you might be able to draw the conclusion that they can talk themselves into other things."

THOMPSON said, however, that there is a lot of superstition involved in the concept of mental preparation.

"There's no clear evidence to show the effect of that attitude," he said. "I don't want to support the superstition."

Besides Haffener-Frost, others disagree with Thompson.

Mental preparation is probably the most important aspect in coaching and athletics, Jerome Howe, assistant track coach, said.

"The most complex areas in coaching are mental preparation on the group and individual basis," Howe said, but added it cannot really be controlled by the coach like the physical and physiological preparation.

Most coaches would say 80 percent of winning is mental and 20 percent is physical; and in the field of distance running, raw physical ability is not the most important thing, he said.

"A great burden of this has to fall on the coach's shoulders," he said. "The coach has got to project this desire to win, to excel."

PROBLEMS occur when a coach oversimplifies the idea of mental preparation, Howe said.

"They (coaches) don't realize how very complex the human personality is," he said, adding that each individual must be treated according to his needs.

Howe said mental preparation was founded on myth, but has become an important part of coaching.

In terms of fitness, athletes can be tested and all would be the same, but when the "gun goes off," the athlete who is mentally prepared will be the winner, he said.

"Having the right attitude can give you the preparation you need," he said. "It is the key."

Begin to meet with Carter

WASHINGTON—Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin will fly here Friday to confer with President Carter "on how best to continue the move toward a just peace settlement in the Middle East," the White House announced Tuesday evening.

Begin proposed the meeting to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, currently touring Middle East capitals, late last week, said Carter's press secretary, Jody Powell. Carter extended a formal invitation last Sunday.

The Israeli leader's visit will come two days after the launching of direct preparatory peace talks in Cairo between Israeli and Egyptian representatives.

39 released from Mexico

SAN DIEGO—Thirty-nine American prisoners brought home from Mexican jails as part of a historic swap treaty gained their freedom on probation Tuesday. Most rushed from the gates of a federal prison here into the arms of waiting relatives or friends.

Alison Margaret Baughman, 24, of Jefferson Town, Ky., was the first to be freed from the Metropolitan Correctional Center here. As a group of reporters surrounded her, she kissed an unidentified friend. She declined to comment other than to say that freedom "feels fantastic."

James Douglas, 27, of Austin, Texas, said: "The first thing I want to do is get a drink. I've got a little bar picked out right over there." Douglas, who spent four years and three months in Mexican prisons for cocaine possession, said, "I'm afraid my life is going to be changed. Right now, I'm not sure just how. I think I'll go work in a circus."

W. Germany tests missiles

WASHINGTON—West Germany has taken over a Colorado-size chunk of Zaire where it is secretly producing and testing cruise and intermediate-range ballistic missiles with U.S. approval, according to Penthouse magazine.

However, American diplomatic and intelligence officials discounted the report Tuesday, saying their evidence showed the tests by a West German firm in Zaire were non-military.

In an article scheduled for publication in Penthouse's March issue, former New York Times diplomatic correspondent Tad Szulc wrote that prototypes of four or five cruise missiles, designed to carry nuclear warheads, already have flown over the 100,000-square mile area.

Szulc said a mysterious West German firm based near Frankfurt, the Orbital Launch and Rocket Corp., has signed a 24-year contract with Zaire that gives it virtual sovereignty over the province of Shaba, formerly Katanga, at a rate of $50 million per year. The company is supported from the Bonn military budget, the article said.

Elvis items go on block

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—For $5, the faithful can bid on the treasures of The King.

Auctioneer Don Smith said he expects about 700 fans of the late Elvis Presley to be on hand Wednesday night when he starts selling about 40 items that Smith will swear once belonged to the King of Rock 'n' Roll.

Smith said in an interview Tuesday that he has no idea how much money will change hands.

"Here we're dealing with sentiment and emotions," he said. "There's no way to tell what it will bring."

Smith picked up most of the items from Elvis and other members of the Presley family. He had sold some Presley items at earlier auctions in 1967 and 1968, and now is offering what remains.

Tie for second between Scooter Brubaker who suggested using it as a hog-o-dome and Jerry Arnold who suggested renting it to the army for long range target practice.

And taking first in this category is Martha Wherry who wants to see it turned into a K-State version of Motel 6.

Not-so-Absurd: Fifth place goes to Robert Hamilton and his suggestion to turn Nichols into a museum.

Fourth: Doug Allen and his suggestion to use the building for classrooms for some of the colleges that need space.

Third: Edward Wenzl, who suggested to sell it as a "piece of the rock".

Second: Arleen Cook who wants it as an art exhibit and theater area.

And the Not-So-Absurd winner with one of the most feasible suggestions submitted is J. Christopher McCully who suggested it be used as a park and who also volunteered to donate $100 to the cause.

Hospital merger still possible

The consolidation of Manhattan's two hospitals is not dead; it is merely suffering from growth pains. Balance of growth, to be exact.

As Manhattan moves inevitably towards the one-hospital concept, each hospital administration is watching the other closely, wary of large expansion projects that may put one hospital in the position to be the facility chosen as the "full-service hospital."

Memorial Hospital Executive Director Tom Faulkner volunteered to be the first to speak against St. Mary Hospital's $2 million expansion project proposal when it was before the Kansas Health Systems Agency on Dec. 8, citing "considerable opposition by the Riley County Medical Society, individual physicians, as well as consumers."

Faulkner said the St. Mary proposal, turned down by HSA, "poses a real financial threat and would result in the closing of Memorial Hospital."

AT THIS RATE, the two hospitals can conceivably continue their game of expansion roulette for the next 50 years with no noticeable improvement in medical care for the city.

Or, they can face the obvious alternatives.

The Riley County Medical Society unanimously agreed that St. Mary Hospital was its choice for the one-hospital concept—until it realized it could never be a "full service facility" because the Sisters of St. Joseph, who own the hospital, will not allow abortions and sterilizations in the hospital.

If the Sisters of St. Joseph really wanted to advance the level of health care in Manhattan they should graciously sell the hospital at a reasonable profit and withdraw from the scene.

The other alternative is to construct an entirely new full-service medical facility and close both hospitals.

In any case, positive action is needed.

The quality of medical care in Manhattan should not be allowed to slide another five or 10 years while the two hospitals continue their dogfight.

A year before the strike

Braving chilly weather in cabbied tractors with central heating and air conditioning, CB radios (the farmers with the money have 40 channels), door-to-door carpeting, rhinestone-studded dashboards and electric windows, nearly 1,500 farmers rolled their vehicles into Topeka last week. Their purpose was to protest low farm prices and to illustrate to the state capital that they were serious about striking today.

Even in downtown Manhattan tractors beat the streets, so to speak, and protested with signs of "100 percent parity or poverty." But go back 10 years, no make that one, and ask a farmer to participate in a strike asking the government to insure price increases based on the cost of living.

"HEY DAD," a K-State senior in agriculture said a year ago. "I think the farmers should organize a protest. Drive all their tractors to the state capital and protest low prices."

"A protest! What have you been learning in that school? Protesting's for hippies."

"But dad, the farmers will be starving in two years and if they don't do something now they'll go broke. Farmers need government support to guarantee 100 percent parity."

"Now don't you start talking like a communist. Old Ralph Hanson used to say the universities of this nation were filled with communist teachers. 100 percent parity and government support. Farmers don't need the government and for the sake of free enterprise the farmers should do the best to keep the bureaucrats out of farming. It's hard work that keeps farmers alive these days and it'll be hard work that'll keep 'em going next year and the year after that. Kids these days. You send 'em to school, buy 'em books and they come home using big fancy words no one's ever heard of and talking like a communist. You better straighten up."

ALTHOUGH I'm not an expert, I've have had some farm background. I think the farmers should cut out all the striking and protesting. Now don't get me wrong. Being against the farmers strike in Kansas is worse than hoping the Russians win the coming basketball game with K-State. I propose that instead of protesting the farmers should simply take next year off. Not only will this give farmers time to clean up the back yard and do that tree trimming and fence mending that needs to be done but it'll use up the grain reserves, lessen the supply and create a demand. This will raise prices.

Fears of food shortages are unjustified. Some farmers still have grain stored from 1973 and this storage won't run out in one year.

It's time farmers operated as businessmen.

It takes more to make a business than some soil and seeds. Farmers have known this for years but have had the attitude that the only thing that makes a business successful is hard work and the government should tend to the Middle East and stay out of the wheat field in Kansas.

This thinking went out with McCarthyism. Farmers have no control over the market, which few other businesses can say, and their protest and the strike is an attempt to gain some control.

Of course, many farmers made mistakes when the price of wheat was $4 a bushel by buying more land and big fancy tractors. Hopefully, now most of them have learned their lesson and it's time the government gave what little support it can give.

Unfortunately it can do little; but when the Post Office was going broke, the government stepped in and found a way to help, when the Kansas Power and Light Company needed a rate increase the government stepped in and found a way, when the Social Security systems got in trouble the government again stepped in and is finding a way.

But when the farmers are in trouble the government just looks the other way.

Farmers in economic slavery

Editor,

Today, participants in the American Agriculture Movement will go on strike. This movement includes farmers of all kinds, and is an attempt to bring attention to the desperate financial situation of agriculture, especially that of the small family farm.

We do not want price supports or government subsidies, but a new and more effective farm program. We are demanding 100 percent of parity, parity being comparable to the minimum wage received by those who have "regular" jobs.

Farmers are no longer going to remain in a situation which, in a free-enterprise system, can only be considered as economic slavery. It is time for the farmer to overcome society's stereotype of it being the farmer's duty to feed the world and lose money doing it.

Rather, we will continue our production only when it becomes profitable to do so. We are tired of being asked to temper the urban community.

SENATOR Bob Dole told us in Topeka that we must educate the people in the cities and inform them of our plight, but it is too late for that. The farmer is like a drowning man, with the Senator on shore telling the urbanites, "I will teach you how to swim so you can save him."

Farmers want only their fair share, and a chance to make a decent living and a future for their families. If wheat farmers receive parity for their grain, the price of bread should go up two or three cents.

Economically, it would be much more disastrous for our nation if the farmers lost their financial battles than if they received parity at the marketplace for their agricultural products. Americans everywhere should realize that the situation of the agricultural community affects the entire country.

Farmers are only asking for the chance to continue the small family farm, for we don't want to see it end with the present generation. One will find few people prouder than a farmer to be an American, so we ask our country to review our grievances and rightfully reward us for our labors.

Farm strike serious

Editor,

In response to the publicity currently being given to the plight of the nation's farmers, I believe we should give the farmers what they need and want before it is too late. The survival of America as a democratic republic depends upon it. It is that serious!

Frith claims right to ban

Editor,

I am disappointed. No, I'm disgusted. I had a talk with Tom Frith the afternoon of Dec. 11. I inquired as to what he really meant when he issued a statement to the effect that the display of Christmas lights in dorm windows would be prohibited because "The message which it gives the community is in error."

He clarified his position by saying that the ban has nothing at all to do with cost, and that the ban of these lights will conserve no appreciable energy. Mr. Frith simply feels that he has the right to force 4,300 residents to demonstrate his own feelings on energy conservation to the community.

He claims he has the right to ban hot combs, TVs, stereos, popcorn poppers or anything else he feels the non-use of will conserve energy. He also claims his actions and explanations of such need not be reasonable.

Mr. Frith claims that residents enter a dorm with only their constitutional rights behind them, and that all other rights do not exist unless specifically given to them by housing (he preferred the word "permissions").

I suppose if Mr. Frith felt that there might be a water shortage in the future, he could limit us to one shower a week. The whole issue here is not one of conservation, but one of fundamental personal rights. We are being forced to participate in a public demonstration conceived by Mr. Frith which we have not consented to.

What was even more outrageous was that when I asked Mr. Frith whether he personally, Housing Council or some administrative committee had made the decision, he bluntly retorted that it was none of my business. Since when don't students have the right to know who makes decisions around here?

The banning of Christmas lights in windows was merely a cheap shot serving only to antagonize the students. Mr. Frith knew that opposition would be disperse and hard to form at this time of the year when tests are impending. Why did he not ban the high power-consuming flood lights used on Homecoming float decorations? He obviously realized opposition would be too great at that time and would overturn his decision.

The residence halls have Christmas lights galore (extra ones since they can't be used in the windows) all over their lobbies and hallways, but you have to come inside to see them.

If conservation is what we're after, let's go after big consumers of energy. The spirit Christmas lights convey is well worth the relatively insignificant amount of energy expended on them. We are not saving energy or even fully conserving the Christmas spirit by hiding the lights within the halls.

Peanuts meaningful

Editor,

In response to the letter by Janet Burns on the Peanuts comic strip, I happen to disagree with the opinion presented on this strip. Ms. Burns may fail to receive any enjoyment from Peanuts, but think of all the people who do enjoy a strip based on more meaningful premises.

Beetle Bailey may be constantly devising a way to avoid work, but I wonder if it is as enjoyable to watch an adult trying to get out of his work as it is to watch a group of children who are able to relate ideas which are meaningful to many more people. The Peanuts strip is a look at real people who are dealing with the real, basic problems and feelings that we all experience.

PERSONALLY, I would much rather read a strip whose characters are children dealing with real-life, adult problems than a strip whose adult characters tend to behave rather childishly.

The Collegian welcomes letters from readers.

All letters must be signed and include proper identification. This would include title or classification, major and telephone number.

Letters may be submitted (preferably typed) in Kedzie-103 or the editorial desk in the newsroom.

As far as I am concerned, Peanuts is not a bunch of losers. If anything, the stagnant Beetle Bailey humor is a sure loser. Peanuts humor is straightforward, realistic and intelligent. Beetle Bailey humor is based on crude violence, girl watching and potato peeling—things which we intellectual college students certainly all want to spend our time on.

In a world such as the one we live in a little innocence will due us all some good, but Beetle Bailey certainly is not the essence of innocence.

Keep Snoopy

Editor,

RE: Several letters to the editor in Monday's Collegian.

If the Collegian is willing to sponsor a straw vote on whether or not to keep the Peanuts comic strip as a daily feature, I'll be the first to admit that I'd stuff the ballot boxes in favor of keeping it.

I have 30 of my favorite comic strips hung on my bulletin board, and half of them are by Schulz. Let's keep him "creatively employed."

Union candy case ditched; thieves pocket contents

Someone found a cheap way to fill a lot of Christmas stockings when they walked off with the candy case, which usually sits at the K-State Union information desk, last weekend.

The case, which contained about $100 worth of candy, will be replaced sometime Thursday, Union Director Walt Smith said.

"I do know one thing; when we replace it, it's going to be fastened to the counter," he said.

THE CASE, which weighs about 100 pounds, was reported missing to campus police early Saturday morning. They found it later that day in a ditch at the intersection of Kimball and Denison Avenues, northeast of the intramural fields.

Police said the case was empty when they found it, but it had not been damaged much. Although police had no leads Tuesday, an investigation is continuing.

"It looks like whoever took it just plied off the plexiglass," Smith said.

Paula Winchell, senior in business, who was on duty at the information desk before it was taken, said, "nothing was going on (at the Union) just some movies like normal."

SMITH SAID the case was taken after the desk had closed, sometime between midnight and 1:30 Saturday morning.

"There are janitors and a night manager around, but the building's so big, there's no way they could be around all the time," Winchell said.

"It was probably taken on impulse," Smith said. "The thing is pretty awkward and heavy; I'm sure they were nervous."

"The case is so heavy one person couldn't have lifted it," Winchell said.

She said they (information desk workers) had joked about it being stolen, but had never really given much thought to the idea.

"What do you do but eat it, (the candy)? There's nothing in it you could sell," she said.

FBI infiltrators tell of underground group

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Two FBI agents who infiltrated the ultra-secret political underground say they trained in the desert with a tiny band of revolutionaries who were preparing a new campaign of violence.

According to one high FBI official, the group "was talking about assassinations, about sniping, about blowing up buildings, about putting a bomb under the seat of some judge's car."

Five persons, including the 62-year-old "patriarch" of the leftist underground movement, are now in custody, facing arraignment Wednesday on charges stemming from an alleged plot to bomb the office of Rep. John Briggs, R-Calif., an outspoken opponent of homosexual rights.

Though the FBI was able to engineer the arrest of five persons allied with the radical Weather Underground, leaders of the revolutionary group—such as the best known, Bernardine Dohrn—remain fugitives.

"If we knew where they were, we'd pick them up tonight," says one FBI official.

LEFTIST sources surmise the FBI may have decided to finally "surface" its undercover agents out of frustration for the failure to locate better known radical leaders.

On Nov. 19, Richard Giannotti and William Reagan ended their long undercover work with the five arrests, exposing a rare view of the left-wing activists' secret, and sometimes violent, life underground.

The undercover agents say they began working with five revolutionaries last May, directing firearms training in a secluded Mojave desert area, and receiving instructions on explosives from two women who led a small "combat team." One agent said misinformation on firearms was purposefully supplied.

The agents were trusted members of the group, but even so they never knew anything more than the first name of the others—and then only "code names."

Men aren't lured to campus despite number of women

WASHINGTON (AP)—Young men are finding college less attractive, even though that's where the women are, a Census Bureau study shows.

The report released Tuesday suggested fewer men are enrolling because they are not eligible for GI education benefits or they no longer need Vietnam war draft deferments.

It speculated another reason may be that young men now consider a college education less important.

The proportion of 18- and 19-year-old men who have completed one year of college declined from 13.6 percent in 1970 to 10.9 percent this year, the report said.

However, during the same period, a higher proportion of women the same age completed the same education, increasing from 12.9 percent to 13.2 percent.

Larry Suter, who heads the education statistics branch, said women have exceeded men in education at that age group for three years.

Tradition: The binding force among greeks

By JAYNE AYLWARD
Collegian Reporter

"You may ask why we do this and I'll tell you: I don't know. But it's tradition!" (from Fiddler on the Roof).

Many fraternity and sorority traditions are flourishing at K-State, even though the age of raccoon coats and goldfish-swallowing is over.

Although some traditions, especially certain pranks, have also caused harm and other problems to greeks and outsiders alike and have even ended up being settled in the courtroom, most are generally a symbol of togetherness and clean fun.

The firing of Phi Kappa Tau fraternity's cannon kicked off each K-State home football game this year as it has for the past several years.

Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity has been keeper of the infamous firetruck for 10 years. The firetruck is the national Pike symbol, so traditionally every Pike house that can afford to buy a truck, said Mike Bodelson, senior in architecture. Bodelson is one of the four members of the Pike house qualified to act as "firechief."

"We use it (the firetruck) to go to games and to pick up our little sisters," Bodelson said. "We also use it for waterfights because it's completely functional. Any girls that sunbathe around the dorms know that."

THE TRADITIONAL painting of the Beta Theta Pi "rock" came to a temporary halt when it was destroyed this fall. A new "rock" was completed a few weeks ago, so the painting will probably resume, said Randy Groves, senior in electrical engineering and Beta Theta Pi member.

Rumor has it that anyone caught painting the rock will have their head shaved. "Heads have been shaved many times," Groves said, "but the last time anybody

Founder's Day is celebrated by almost all greek houses with a dinner and dance during which the undergraduate members can meet the alumni and learn about the house's history.

"The traditions definitely weren't a detriment to my pledging, but I think it's important that they have some meaning," said Donna Mann, junior in dietetics and Pi Beta Phi member.

"The things greeks traditionally do are just a part of college life, everybody has their way of having fun. When I lived in the dorm my freshman year there were traditions like we (greeks) have," said Tracey Smith, senior in chemical engineering and Kappa Kappa Gamma president.

ALPHA TAU OMEGA fraternity has established a tradition of winning the national fraternity newsletter contest, said Larry Kogler, junior in agricultural mechanization. The fraternity has had the best newsletter in the nation for four years.

With traditions used as an example, greeks are frequently described as clannish because they become limited in the scope of their friendships and don't develop friendships with non-greeks.

"The reason greeks give other people that kind of first impression attitude is because a greek living in the house has all the companionship they have time for," Heffel said.

Some traditions become victims of changing times, as did the bottle rocket "wars." These years, they mushroomed into parties at times attended by more than 300 persons.

THE PARTIES were halted because, according to Riley County police sergeant, city ordinances prohibiting disturbing of the peace, littering and drinking beer in public were violated by the revelers.

But, according to those involved with fraternities and sororities, problems caused by greek traditions are overshadowed by their benefits and the benefits of greek living.

"Traditions give them (sorority members) something to look forward to. It gives the house a bond," said Dee Ann Stanley, Panhellenic council president. "Almost all houses (fraternities and sororities) adopt a philanthropy every year."

"I think the traditions help hold each house together and make it unique from other houses. The ones where great expense is involved aren't necessary, but most of them, like serenading, are fun," said Jill Schul, senior in early childhood education.

"Some of the traditions seem strange to people that aren't familiar with greek life, but I don't see any reason to complain about them," said Greg Morrical, junior in agronomy. "Some of the money-raising ones are really a good deal and the only reason independents can't do the same thing is because they aren't close-knit enough to get organized."

Methods used by the fraternities and sororities to raise money for the oldest sorority. It didn't abandon its original name, I.C. Sorosis, until 1888.

"All sororities are truly women's fraternities," said Barb Robel, Panhellenic adviser. Women's organizations are traditionally called sororities to differentiate them from those of men. Robel said. Sorority was first suggested to the Gamma Phi Beta chapter and the term came into common usage.

"We claim Paddy Murphy to be our estranged ninth founder," said Don Smith, Sigma Alpha Epsilon (SAE) member. The Paddy Murphy celebration at the SAE house each year ranges from a wedding ceremony to a funeral for the honoree, Smith said. Spoleople is the traditional drink at the party, he said.

Phi Delta Theta and Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternities have met on the football field for the Flush Bowl for 29 years. A "traveling trophy" toilet is the reward for the winner of the game.

TRADITIONAL Flush Bowl festivities also include crowning of a Flush Bowl queen and a party. A live kazoo band in Flying F spin formation, similar to the K-State spin, provide the halftime entertainment.

"The Flush Bowl was started in 1948 because K-State didn't have a bowl game," said Jay Benson, Phi Delta Flush Bowl chairman.

The Pig, the formal Beta Theta Pi fraternity party, has been a house tradition for 66 years, Groves said.

The "Blackfoot, Whitefoot" celebration is an annual event for Alpha Tau Omega and Sigma Nu fraternities to commemorate their joint founding at Virginia Military Institute, said Larry Kogler, ATO member. The fraternities paint black and white feet on the steps of all K-State sorority houses as part of the celebration.

Acacia fraternity house is transformed into the Nile River area for the fraternity's traditional Night on the Nile party, said Ralph Crumrine, junior in general business administration. Acacia members and their dates don Egyptian garb for the party.

Marty Luther days were established by Beta Sigma Psi in 1955 to commemorate this Lutheran fraternity's leader, Martin Luther. Each K-State fraternity and sorority is represented in seminars on greek life, said John Bosch senior in political science.

An "All Star Football Leg Fame" with coed and all-male teams comprised of K-State greeks is part of the celebration. A church service with a choir composed of fraternity and sorority members is also included, Bosch said.

THE TRADITION of hazing is being eliminated nationally.

"Hazing is anything demeaning, dangerous or demoralizing," Robel said. It (hazing) is one of the most controversial greek traditions, because of some fatal accidents that have occurred at other colleges in the past.

"The Nation" magazine on Oct. 25, 1959 reported that during the first 10 days of school, six students at Cornell University required medical care for hazing injuries.

(see K-STATE, p. 9)

Some traditions become victims of changing times, as did the bottle rocket 'wars.'

got shaved was five or six years ago."

A bell located at the Tau Kappa Epsilon (TKE) fraternity, has alerted house members to sorority serenading parties for about 25 years, according to Steve Thompson, junior in journalism and mass communications. It is a custom for sororities to "steal" this bell and hold it for "ransom," which is usually a serenade by TKE house members, Thompson said.

As with explaining many customs, fraternity and sorority members have few concrete explanations as to why their house carries on certain traditions.

"The big thing tradition offers is a continuity from year to year," said Jerry Lilly, Interfraternity council adviser. "It (tradition) is also the little things that give each house an identity and stability."

"The traditions didn't affect which house I pledged. Traditions just kind of set one house apart from the others," said Marty Foltz, sophomore in pre-design professions and Delta Tau Delta member.

"This house is basically very bound by traditions, but things are always changing faster all the time," said Tim Heffel, junior in finance and Delta Tau Delta president.

"Founder's Day celebrations are very important because they acknowledge the history, rituals and alumni that made the organization possible," Lilly said about his favorite greek tradition.

"wars," held for many years between neighboring fraternities, were labeled as dangerous and discontinued by IFC this year. The wars also broke the city ordinance which prohibits the shooting of fireworks after July 5.

"It (shooting bottle rockets) could lead to a very dangerous situation and is a fire hazard," a Riley County police officer said.

A bottle rocket war between Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternities last spring ended with a Riley County police officer pulling a gun on a Sig Ep member, said Kurt Carmean, sophomore in crop protection and Delta Tau Delta member.

Stealing of composite pictures also ended this year. IFC and Panhellenic council, the fraternity and sorority governing councils, respectively, decided the pictures were too expensive to risk being lost or broken. Traditionally, the house that had their composite stolen had to serenade the "thieves" to get it back.

Greek traditions have not only caused some problems within the greek system itself, but have also at times strained relations with those living near greek houses.

Complaints from area residents about parties on the median strip in the 1800 block of Fairchild ended a 20-year-old K-State fraternity and sorority tradition this year.

The "island" parties originated as gatherings of women from neighboring sororities. In recent their projects are widely varied.

Phi Gamma Delta has held its "Run for Leukemia" for four years. This relay, stretching from the K-State Fiji house to the University of Kansas Fiji house, is run by members of both chapters, said Roger Lawrence, freshman in accounting.

Acacia fraternity members play cards with members of a K-State sorority in front of the Union for 150 hours for their Card-a-Thon each year. Alpha Delta Pi sorority was their card partner last year.

All K-State sororities participate in the traditional Delta Chi fraternity fund-raiser, the Tug-a-War.

"The Tug-a-War was started 12 years ago because they (the founders) wanted to have something that would make a lot of money and that would make the house well-known," said Mike Brunner, senior in pre-design professions.

TRADITIONS are very important to fraternities because they make the fraternity thrive," said Mark Eagleton, former IFC president. "Sometimes they're trivial, but they're fun."

Phi Gamma Delta fraternity members dress as purple painted natives in grass skirts for the annual Fiji Islander party.

The party is an annual nationwide party done at all Fiji chapters. It is a custom that was initiated shortly after the founding of the fraternity in 1894.

Pi Beta Phi, founded in 1867, is K-State first to slap hazing; most universities followed

"Time" magazine of September 28, 1959, reported the death of Robert Swanson, a Kappa Sigma pledge at the University of Southern California, by choking after he, as part of his pledge hazing, attempted to swallow a thick slice of oil-soaked raw liver without chewing.

Hazing, to which pledges were most commonly subjected, has existed in both fraternities and sororities, Robel said.

Lilly said the K-State IFC outlawed hazing in 1956—the first university council in the nation to do so. All other pre-initiation activities were also discontinued.

"We're very proud of the fact that the students outlawed it," Lilly said. Hazing is now outlawed at most other universities.

Hazing still occasionally occurs at K-State, but if Lilly or Robel hear about these activities "they don't exist for long," Robel said.

Common hazing pranks are blindfolding the greek pledge and making him eat a can of cooked spaghetti after the pledge is told it is worms or making the pledge wear red socks on campus all day.

For the "pledge walk" on a given evening, usually without warning, all of the pledges are rounded up and driven to a remote locale, dropped off and told to walk back to the house.

Another greek custom are "sneaks" by fraternity and sorority pledge, junior and senior classes. The class usually secretly goes to an out-of-state chapter of its house for a weekend.

"We (IFC) encourage pre-planned pledge or active trips or retreats instead of sneaks," Lilly said. IFC requires the fraternity to register the trip or sneak for safety reasons.

"We think that the registration requirement encourages advance planning," Lilly said. Sororities aren't required to register their sneaks, Robel said.

GREEK WEEK is an annual spring tradition. Members of fraternities and sororities dedicate the week to seminars, retreats and social events.

"It gives members of different houses a chance to get better acquainted," Lilly said.

Lavaliering is a type of "going steady" practiced by greeks. Pinning is a step beyond lavaliering and is usually followed by engagement.

A surprise announcement of lavaliering, pinning and engagements to sorority sisters occurs in the traditional candlelighting ceremony. All members of the sorority, sitting in a dark room in a circle, pass a candle around the group until it comes to the "special" girl, who then blows out the candle.

Secrecy adds color, mystery and the common bond within the individual fraternity and sorority houses. Secret aspects include ritualistic ceremonies, passwords, songs, grips and other paraphernalia. Most of the houses have a "symbol." Kappa Kappa Gamma, for example, has a key, Pi Beta Phi an arrow and Gamma Phi Beta a crescent.

The popularity of fraternity and sorority living has varied since the founding of the first fraternity in 1776. But through the greek system's ups and downs traditions have been a binding force.

DRC recommends commission adopt strong downtown stand

By DAVE HUGHES
Collegian Reporter

A plan for supporting downtown renovation was presented to Manhattan City Commissioners at last night's work session by representatives from the Downtown Redevelopment Committee (DRC).

Richard Burke, co-chairman of DRC, said the commissioners must develop a master plan and appoint a new city official who would seek financial assistance from federal agencies.

Burke said the new city post is needed because several federal agencies would have to be sought to finance downtown redevelopment.

Lawrence and Dodge City renovated their downtown areas by using Urban Renewal funds but the program no longer exists, he said.

Manhattan could get the money from the government but would have to go to individual agencies to do so, he said.

Burke said Manhattan could apply to the Department of Transportation for funds to reroute highway K-177 south of Manhattan and the Department of Justice for lighting in the downtown area.

The request for the lighting system could be justified by saying it would cut down on crime, he said.

Burke said 51 percent of the property owners in the downtown areas are in favor of going ahead with downtown redevelopment.

"We (the property owners) are ready to make a commitment," he said. However, "the private sector is unable to come up with all the funds necessary for redevelopment" of downtown. The private sector already has committed $250,000, he said.

Commissioner Terry Glasscock said he would like to see the commission take active pursuit of the recommendations presented by the DRC. The city, he said, should take the lead in initiating action concerning downtown development.

In other business, the commissioners heard a report from Manhattan's engineering department on the drainage problem on Hunting Avenue.

Because of development in that area, runoff from those lots has been flooding the yards and homes of residents below the developed area, City Engineer Bruce McCallum said.

"We are getting all the drainage from the property above us," said Beulah Westerman, a Hunting Avenue resident.

"We have no protection (from the runoff) except what we put in ourselves," Westerman said.

City Atty. Ed Horne said the city has no ordinance that can require developers to install drainage systems in the lot on which they build.

"The city is not in a position to do anything except to advise with respect to" installing drainage systems, Horne said.

Langton drives past critics with his eyes on the future

By CINDY FRIESEN
Collegian Reporter

Despite the statistics and conversation saying Scott Langton is not playing well this year, he believes his performance has improved from a year ago, and he sees himself making a greater contribution to the K-State basketball team as the season progresses.

"I'm not doing as well as I was at the end of last season, but I am doing better than I was at this time last year," the 5-11 senior guard from Manhattan said. "It just takes some time to get back into things."

So far this season, Langton has averaged 6.4 points and in five games has passed out 13 assists and grabbed nine rebounds. Last season, he averaged slightly less at 6.1 points and had only six rebounds in five games.

In the last home game against Oral Roberts, Langton was scoreless, missing all of his seven field goal attempts. He attributed his home-front troubles to being somewhat nervous.

"I was a little tight in the game with ORU," he said. "Against Vanderbilt (when he scored 14 points) I was relaxed and played pretty well. Physically, I was in good shape and I could have played the full 40 minutes."

ASU Sun Devils next for K-State

The K-State men's basketball team will begin a tour of the southwestern part of the country tonight when the 'Cats tangle with the Arizona State Sun Devils in Tempe. Game time is set for 8:30 p.m., CST.

K-State, 5-0 for the season, has been unable to defeat the Sun Devils in three meetings. Arizona State stands 3-3 on the season, including a 79-78 victory over Houston Saturday night.

After meeting Arizona State, the Wildcats will move to the Sun Bowl Classic in El Paso, Tex., Thursday to compete in the four-team tournament.

K-State will open against Army as Texas-El Paso and Memphis State battle in the other opening-round game.

K-State has never played the Cadets from West Point; stands 2-0 versus UTEP, and lost to Memphis State, 92-72, in the midwest NCAA regionals in 1973 in their only meeting.

Barring injury, K-State basketball history could be made during the trip as all-American guard Mike Evans is expected to become the Wildcats' all-time leading scorer.

Evans needs just 34 points to surpass the 1,685 points accumulated by K-State's Bob Boozer.

Sports

"But when we came back to the home crowd I tightened up. I guess it's because we want to play well for our fans," he said.

LANGTON said he doesn't pay attention to criticism unless it's from friends or someone who "knows what they are talking about."

"Of course friends are going to compliment you, but I kind of brush over that and listen to the criticism they make because I know they want to help me," he said.

Langton also said he didn't worry whether the Cats were ranked in national polls.

"I look at it like Coach Hartman does—if they are going to have polls, of course we want to be on them, but it is early in the season and the ranked teams are changing all the time," he said.

The Wildcats are ranked on the AP poll for the first time this season, checking in at 19 in the voting Tuesday.

Langton said Coach Hartman and the team look at it in a realistic way.

"We are bound to lose some and win some, but we know that on a given night we can probably beat just about anybody. Well, maybe not right now, but by the end of the season, we should have developed and be able to beat any team."

"We are playing better now than at this point last year so maybe you could say we have a head start," he said.

AT THIS point in the season, the team doesn't have a curfew, and Langton said it is part of Hartman's coaching philosophy—understanding the partying habits of college students.

"He doesn't always condone the things we do, and he has talked to us about it, but his main concern is for our image," Langton said. "We don't go down to Aggie and get drunk. We mostly party in private. If we do (drink), we just have one beer."

Langton has always wanted to play basketball for a major college team, he said.

"My dad played for K-State but he didn't have anything to do with my decision to stay here in Manhattan," he said. "K-State was a major team and I wasn't ready to leave my family or friends."

Langton's younger brother, Terry, also plays guard—for Johnson County Community Junior College near Kansas City.

"I think the best times I've ever had playing basketball were when I was horsing around with my brother," he said. "I tried to help him, but when we played we mainly were out to have fun."

Langton said he is in favor of a new field house at K-State, stressing the importance of the fans here.

"If they build a new one (field house), I hope they make it so the fans are still right down on the court," Langton said. "Playing at Ahearn is different than playing anywhere else. The fans are right there on the court and it's great. It really makes a big difference."

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses
this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next January during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Powers heads to Missouri with WSU strings attached

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP)—Warren Powers, who brought football respectability to Washington State in one year, came back to Missouri Tuesday as head football coach and predicted even more for the Tigers.

"I didn't come here to place second, third or fourth. I came here to win the conference and go to bowl games," said Powers after being named to replace Al Onofrio at the University of Missouri.

The announcement by Chancellor Herbert W. Schooling at a news conference in Columbia represented a homecoming of sorts for Powers, a Kansas City native who once played and coached at Nebraska.

"It's always been a dream of mine to come back here and coach," said Powers, who had led Washington State to a 6-5 season, its first winning campaign in five years. Among the victories was an upset win over Nebraska.

"Even when I was at Nebraska we (Powers and his wife, a Missouri graduate) talked about what it would be like to be a coach here."

BUT THE fulfillment of his dream was accompanied by some stiff and unprecedented conditions from Washington State, which lost its third coach in three years.

Powers, 36, had been rumored for more than a week to be the top candidate to succeed Onofrio, who was fired Nov. 23 after leading the Tigers to a 4-7 record.

Washington State officials had said they would fight his departure and they made good on the threat Tuesday by requiring a settlement of $55,000 from Powers for the release of the final two years of his contract.

"We believed this is the first instance when a football coach has been required to compensate a university to satisfy the remaining years of a contract," Washington State Athletic Director Sam Jankovich said at a news conference in Pullman, Wash.

THE MONEY is to be paid over three years with interest, said Jankovich. About $5,000 has already been paid.

"It's something me and my wife will have to work out," Powers said in Columbia.

Schooling said Missouri would not be involved in the contract settlement.

Powers will be paid about $35,000 a year at Missouri, about $3,000 more than he was earning at Washington State. Onofrio's salary in his seventh year at the Tiger helm was about $33,000.

Powers will have a three-year non-binding agreement with the Tigers similar to the one they had with Onofrio.

K-State breaks into AP Top 20, edging out Jayhawks for No. 19

NEW YORK (AP)—The K-State Wildcats moved into the Associated Press Top Twenty ranked basketball teams Tuesday, edging out the Kansas Jayhawks by a single point for 19th place.

Kansas, 5-1, which had held 19th the week before, dropped to 20th with 46 points after suffering a 77-63 loss to top-rated Kentucky over the weekend. The 'Cats make their debut in the poll with a 5-0 record and 47 points in the voting.

Meanwhile, Kentucky strengthened its grip on the top ranking after North Carolina suffered its first defeat in a half dozen games and dropped to fifth with 485 points. Kentucky garnered 42 of 52 first-place votes and retained No. 1 with 1,014 points.

That margin was well ahead of the 872 points racked up by second-place Notre Dame. Marquette received the only other first-place vote and checked in at third.

St. John's and Utah suffered their first losses of the season and dropped from their respective 13th and 14th positions. Joining K-State in the Top 20 for the first time is Purdue, 17th at 4-1.

The remainder of the first ten consisted of No. 4 Arkansas; No. 6

Cincinnati, No. 7 Indiana State; No. 8 UCLA; No. 9 Nevada-Las Vegas, and Louisville.

The second ten was comprised of San Francisco, Syracuse, Holy Cross, Providence, Michigan, Detroit, Purdue, Maryland, K-State and Kansas.

Anderson accident

A Tuesday afternoon car accident near Westloop left one K-State student, Maruja Bianchini Torres, graduate in education, with a head injury and possible broken bones. She was taken to St. Mary Hospital. Torres, driver of the car in the foreground, was eastbound on Anderson turning left on K-113 when her car was struck by a westbound car driven by Jeanie Nichols, Route 1, according to Riley County police. Nichols suffered bumps and bruises; two children in her car suffered minor injuries and one child escaped unharmed.

Carter bit off more than he could chew, Mondale says

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration may have tried to accomplish too much too soon in its first year, but 1978 will be different, Vice President Walter Mondale said Tuesday.

Mondale predicted the administration's legislative initiatives next year would be "a strong salvo, wisely scheduled."

"One thing we found out was in this first year one must be careful not to overcrowd the institutions to try and solve too much too rapidly," the vice president told a group of reporters in a breakfast interview. He acknowledged President Carter was more optimistic than old Washington hands about the speed of the congressional process.

"If you try to do too much at once, it's hard for all of us to follow it; it's hard for the institutions to handle all of these matters at the same time," said Mondale, who served in Congress for 12 years before becoming vice president.

IN THE wide-ranging interview, Mondale discussed the administration's problems winning congressional approval of an energy program, its relations with Congress in general, difficulties stemming from Japanese imports, farm prices, the Middle East and his role in Carter's White House.

He said the White House's relations with Congress have been rocky at times, but said, "I think this has been one of the most successful congressional sessions in a long, long time."

Mondale pointed to approval of the president's economic stimulus program, the farm bill, housing legislation, the Energy Department and reorganization authority.

But a host of other issues—election law reform, the proposed $50 tax rebate, labor's common situs picketing bill, hospital cost containment, the consumer protection agency, to name a few—have been defeated, dropped or remain in the congressional mill.

In addition, there is no likelihood an energy program will be completed this year. Carter has said enactment of a national energy plan would be the ultimate measure of his first year in office.

HE SAID "we've cleared the platter" of some of the major pieces of legislation Carter wanted to submit—welfare revision and Social Security refinancing, in addition to energy.

Coeds jump to their death as dorm blaze kills seven

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP)—A fire surged through the fourth floor of a women's dormitory at Providence College early Tuesday, killing seven screaming coeds, two of whom jumped to their deaths seconds before firefighters could have rescued them with ladders.

At least 15 other students were injured, authorities said.

Hours after the disaster, the hard-frozen, snow-covered ground below the dormitory windows was stained with drops of blood.

ONE STUDENT said a rash of recent false alarms at the school may have kept some residents from getting out of bed in time.

Many of the victims had stayed up late Monday to decorate their rooms, windows and hallways for Christmas, and fire officials said the blaze may have been caused by faulty Christmas lights or by a hair dryer left on in a closet to dry clothes.

"All I know is some people won't be going home for Christmas," said Nadine Rhodes, a freshman from East Providence, who lived on the same floor of Aquinas Hall as the dead and injured women.

AQUINAS HALL, a U-shaped brick building built in 1939, and other campus buildings were decorated late Monday by students competing for the top prize of $25 in an annual Christmas contest.

According to several of the school's 4,100 students, Aquinas Hall won the contest. Fire officials said there was a lot of flammable material, including paper decorations, hanging in the hallways.

The fire broke out on the top floor at 2:56 a.m. and flashed down the hallway, quickly reaching three alarms.

"At first I thought it was a joke," said Jan Walsh of Needham, Mass., who was awakened by the alarm. "We've had so many lately."

RESIDENTS SAID they awoke to see heavy smoke billowing through the hallways, around door jams and into the rooms.

"A little after 3 (o'clock), we heard somebody running down the hall," said one coed who declined to give her name. "There was smoke going through the door."

They were yelling for help. We saw a girl jump."

Witnesses said some women tried to run through the burning hallway and were overcome by smoke. Two others jumped to their deaths, ignoring pleas by firefighters to wait in their room.

A roommate of the two girls who plunged to their deaths onto the frozen, snow-covered ground was rescued within seconds after her friends jumped.

"If they had waited five more seconds, they would have been saved," a fire investigator said.

3-year-old girl trapped 35 hours in crashed plane

KERRVILLE, Texas (AP)—A 3-year-old girl, trapped for 35 hours in the wreckage of a small plane with the bodies of her parents and brother, was rescued Tuesday by searchers who found her "mumbling and groaning."

Rescuers unstrapped Shera Sneed from the back seat of the plane, which had crashed on an 1,800-foot hill about 50 miles northwest of San Antonio, and took her to a nearby hospital where doctors found she had a fractured arm and leg.

The plane had been spotted Tuesday morning by a helicopter, and a rescue team headed for the site in four-wheel drive vehicles.

The searchers also found the bodies of Shera's father, San Antonio attorney Gerald Wayne Sneed, 33, her mother, Susan Parr Sneed, 32, and Shannon, her 5-year-old brother. The family had been returning home from a visit to Shera's grandparents.

"Shera was just moaning and grumbling when we got there," said Dan Waters of First Texas Flying Service, a family friend and the first at the scene. "It was nothing you could understand. She had a few abrasions but other than that she looked pretty good."

Waters said he tried to comfort the girl but she did not recognize him and apparently did not know what had happened.

The plane crashed Sunday night during a persistent drizzle. Air traffic controllers in San Antonio had received a distress signal from a plane reporting that it was low on fuel and was attempting to reach the Kerrville airport.

Spencer Treharne of the First Texas Flying Service said the plane apparently came within about 20 feet short of clearing the hill.

"He knew the Kerrville airport and was trying to get in," Treharne said of Sneed. "when the engine started to sputter he could not get in. The hill is on the boundary of the airport you might say."

The crash site was three miles northeast of the airport.

Air rescue efforts had been hampered by the rain and the aerial search had begun only Tuesday morning.

Competency-based education program request unlikely

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansas Commissioner of Education Merle Bolton said Tuesday he does not intend at this time to submit any recommendations to the 1978 Legislature on implementing a competency-based education program.

"It's a complicated process," Bolton said after the state Board of Education spent a considerable period of time at its monthly meeting Tuesday analyzing the recent report of a task force it had appointed.

The task force recommended that Kansas schools adopt a program of testing the basic abilities of Kansas school children in the areas of reading, spelling and mathematics.

Bolton said the Board of Education will meet with the education committees of the Kansas Senate and House Jan. 12 to hear experts in the competency-based education field.

The education commissioner said, however, he thinks there are major steps to be taken if a decision is made to go ahead with a competency-based education program for this state.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer:

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer:

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer:

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer:

Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Fire resistant construction will not prevent dorm fires

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

A residence hall fire such as the one which caused the deaths of seven Providence College coeds in a dormitory fire Tuesday also could occur at K-State, according to Frank Duncan, K-State fire department head.

"Don't be lulled into a false sense of security just because you're in a fireproof building," Duncan said. "In a building there are numerous sources of ignition—even an electric typewriter machine."

He said there are too many combustible material in rooms, such as mattresses, clothes and drapes, for the residence halls to be totally fireproof. And there are also many plastic items in the halls, which he said are "very dangerous," because of the toxic fumes generated when ignited.

DUNCAN SAID if a fire broke out in one of the residence halls, the campus department would respond with one fire engine and four firefighters and the Manhattan Fire Department would respond with a fire engine and equal number of firefighters. If the fire was like Tuesday's fire in Rhode Island, he said the city's only aerial ladder truck would have been requested.

K-State has a verbal agreement with the city fire department that it will reinforce campus firefighters in the event of a campus fire.

Duncan said both departments could be on the scene within five minutes, but as in the case of the Providence fire he said that would be too late.

"In the first five to 10 minutes...that's when all the girls died," he said. "It happens super fast."

He said smoke, which causes "90 percent" of all fire-related deaths, can fill an entire residence hall floor in minutes. Duncan's advice is to drop down close to the floor and crawl to safety. If this cannot be accomplished safely, he recommends waiting on a window ledge for help.

BUT WHATEVER happens, he said, never jump. Two of the Providence College coeds jumped four floors to their deaths, seconds before an aerial fire ladder would have reached them, according to news reports.

"I'd say you're almost better off to stay up there and burn," Duncan said.

If the coeds had not panicked, he said they probably would still be alive.

Although Duncan said he did not have complete details on what caused the Providence College fire, he said the building didn't have any smoke detectors or automatic sprinkler systems. K-State's residence halls also do not have those safety devices, but do have fire alarm systems, he said.

TOM FRITH, K-State housing director, was unavailable for comment Wednesday about if and when smoke detectors or automatic sprinkler systems would be installed in K-State residence halls.

The state fire marshal's office requires all group living quarters to have smoke detectors installed in accordance with the state fire safety code. That office inspected most K-State living facilities last winter, and issued recommendations for compliance to the code, enforceable by the state attorney general's office.

The time given for compliance is flexible, Paul Markley, fire protection technical adviser, said.

Russ Collins, chief deputy state fire marshal, said the office will return to K-State "as soon as possible" to inspect the residence halls again, "but not as a result of the Providence fire."

"As long as (fire) escapes are present and the alarm system is active, this is all we ask for," Collins said.

Duncan said it is important that students are educated about what to do in case of fire. All residence hall staff assistants are responsible for orderly evacuation of buildings on fire.

Begin consults with Carter as Egypt-Israel start talks

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—In one of the most significant events in three decades of Middle East hostility, Egypt and Israel opened talks Wednesday that they hope will pave the way for a lasting peace between Arab and Jew.

At the same time, Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin flew to the United States to consult with President Carter.

"Today we sincerely hope we are witnessing the dawn of a new era for this region and the entire world," Egypt's chief delegate said as he opened the conference before television cameras that transmitted the proceedings to Israel and many Arab and European nations.

Egyptian, Israeli and U.S. delegates pledged to work for a Middle East settlement that will involve all the Arabs.

A senior U.S. official here said Begin's visit to Washington could result in new instructions for Israel's delegation, which sat down with Egyptians Wednesday in the first direct Israeli-Arab negotiations ever.

"Mr. Begin wants to discuss with President Carter face to face and reach a common understanding, or at least an understanding of each other's position about what can result" from the current Egyptian peace initiative, the official said. "Out of this there can come feedback here."

Begin arrived in New York Wednesday on his way to the meeting Friday with Carter in Washington.

Egyptian chief delegate Ahmed Esmat Abdel Meguid started the Cairo conference by saying the Palestinian question was central to the Arab-Israeli dispute. He urged the adoption of a "comprehensive settlement whereby the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people are fully realized so that peace and justice may prevail once more in the Middle East."

Israel's delegation chief, Eliahu Ben-Elissar, responded that Israel seeks "a comprehensive agreement and not a separate agreement. It is a real peace east and with all our (Arab) neighbors, to the south, the east and to the north."

Both Ben-Elissar and Meguid spoke in English, the official language of this conference called by President Anwar Sadat after his historic visit to Jerusalem last month. They spoke in the absence of delegations from Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, the Soviet Union and the Palestine Liberation Organization, who refused invitations. Syria, the PLO and the Soviets claim Egypt is ready to sell out the Arab cause for a separate peace.

The United States and United Nations agreed to come to Cairo, where chief U.S. delegate Alfred Atherton echoed his Egyptian and Israeli counterparts at the hourlong opening session.

The talks convened around an oak table in the ornate, domed dining room of the Mena House hotel in the Cairo suburb of Giza, close by the pyramids. The century-old hotel was the scene of the World War II Cairo conference of President Franklin Roosevelt, Winston Churchill and Chiang Kai-shek.

The delegates, who discussed the conference agenda after the opening session, will start working sessions in private Thursday, meet for about 10 days and adjourn before Christmas, sources said.

Controllers heard engine noise before Evansville plane crashed

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP)—Concerned about engine noise and unsure which way the plane was heading, tower controllers tried to hail a chartered DC-3 just before the crash that killed 29 persons including a college basketball team, a federal investigator said Wednesday.

"The tower operators complained that increased engine noise appeared to be coming at them in the tower and they became vastly concerned," Philip Hogue, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, said. "And they wanted to know what heading the aircraft was on."

"The aircraft never had a chance to respond for reasons that we're not sure of but probably due to whatever was taking place in the cockpit just before they crashed," he said at a news conference.

THE PLANE, bound for Nashville, Tenn., took off to the south but had banked to the left and had almost completely turned around when it crashed into a muddy hillside.

Among the dead were the University of Evansville's 14 basketball players and their coach. More than 600 fans and friends of the athletes gathered at the school Wednesday to mourn their deaths at a chapel service.

Earlier, Hogue had said that the tower tried but failed to warn the plane of suddenly deteriorating weather as it was taking off Tuesday night.

"The tower called the aircraft, not to give them additional weather, and this is a correction on our previous information, but called them to ask them what heading they were on," Hogue said later.

The findings came from teams of investigators who also searched the wreckage all day for clues to the crash.

THE CRASH scattered wreckage and bodies on both sides of a ravine and down among some railroad tracks.

It was a fearful night with visibility only three-quarters of a mile. A team of investigators from the safety board was more than two hours late leaving Washington because of the continuing bad weather at Evansville in the southwest corner of Indiana.

Ban on lawyer advertising should draw few objections

By HURST LAVIANA
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas Bar Association (KBA) executive council's recommended ban on broadcast media advertising by lawyers is not expected to draw firm opposition from Kansas attorneys.

"I'm basically in agreement with their recommendations. It eliminates the possibility of exploitation," said Jim Norman, a Manhattan lawyer who is one of a handful of Kansas attorneys taking advantage of the U.S. Supreme Court's ruling earlier this year which permits limited advertising by lawyers.

"There will be some who want less broad restrictions but not a substantial number," Shawnee County District Court Judge Terry Bullock, chairman of the Bar's executive council, said. "The majority don't want advertising at all."

BULLOCK SAID radio and TV ads could be misleading.

"When a lawyer advertises $300 divorces in a one-minute radio spot, does this mean that every divorce will case will be handled for $300? No," he said.

While a simple uncontested divorce might cost $300, not all cases could be handled for that price, Bullock said.

"To be fully truthful, some qualifications are needed," he said.

IF APPROVED by the Kansas Supreme Court, the KBA guidelines will:

—prevent lawyers from advertising memberships in legal fraternities.

—prevent advertising names of prestigious clients.

—prevent (at least temporarily) advertising special fields of law.

—limit advertising to "regular publications with general circulation", eliminating billboards, matchbooks, etc.

Advertising is vital for young lawyers who do not want to join an established law firm and work their way up, Norman said.

"The response has not been overwhelming, but it keeps food on the table," he said.

Daughter of K-State Ag dean dies at parents' Philippine home

LuAnn Hess, 23, daughter of K-State Dean of Agriculture Carroll Hess, died Tuesday at her parents' home in Quezon City, the Philippines.

Cause of death is unknown, but Miss Hess had been under medical care for some time.

In September, she accompanied her parents to the Philippines, where her father is team leader for a joint K-State-Philippine government agriculture project.

Born Dec. 31, 1953, in Bellefonte, Pa., she moved to Manhattan in 1966 when her father was named dean of agriculture.

The 1972 Manhattan High School graduate attended K-State three semesters, majoring in interior design, before withdrawing to work, first in Manhattan and later in San Francisco.

Survivors, in addition to her parents, include a brother, John, Newton; two sisters, Debra Walters, 1705 Sheffield, and Cheryl Dennis, Rt. 3.

The family will accompany the body back to the United States for the funeral, tentatively scheduled for Saturday in Waynesboro, Pa.

The Hess family requests no flowers be sent, but a memorial has been established at Meadowlark Homestead, Newton.

U.N. condemns South Africa

UNITED NATIONS—U.N. General Assembly adopted 14 resolutions last night condemning South Africa and its apartheid system of racial separation. Last year the assembly adopted 11 resolutions against South Africa.

The voting was the delayed conclusion of the assembly debate on apartheid held Nov. 14-17. Eight of the resolutions were adopted unanimously.

"We are not going to pay any attention to the U.N. resolutions or forces outside South Africa," J. Adrian Eksteen, South African U.N. mission counsellor, said.

Roy to declare candidacy

TOPEKA—Former Congressman Bill Roy is expected to announce formally today that he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate in 1978.

Roy has been regarded as the most likely Democratic candidate for the seat being vacated by the retirement of Sen. James Pearson, who announced Oct. 15 he was quitting after his current term.

Roy served in the U.S. House in 1971-75, but vacated his seat in 1974 to unsuccessfully seek the Senate seat held by Republican Sen. Bob Dole.

Phillipsburg strike over

PHILLIPSBURG, Kan.—Striking city employees of Phillipsburg agreed Wednesday to return to work, beginning with the midnight shift.

By a unanimous vote, the 18 striking municipal workers voted to end their strike, although city officials did not meet their demand that the Service Employees Union be recognized as their bargaining agent.

Nineteen employees began the strike last Wednesday. Since then, one of them, Max Gaines, has been designated as a supervisor in the city sanitation department and stopped participating in the job action.

Jim Kramer, city councilman, said both sides met Wednesday to discuss communication problems between employees and the city council, methods of handling grievances and an attempt to define responsibilities and duties of employees.

Cattle beefed up on cement

WASHINGTON—The Agriculture Department may have found a new way for farmers to beef up the weight of their cattle—feed them cement dust.

Not only do cattle fed the dust gain weight faster but new research shows they also produce tastier meat.

Although tests are promising, no one is sure why cement dust causes cattle to gain weight faster, and department officials cautioned farmers against feeding the dust on their own until more research can be done.

The tests started last year when three Georgia farmers mixed some cement dust—which is high in calcium—in their cattle feed. They soon found the animals were gaining about four pounds of weight daily instead of the normal two.

During a 112-day test at the department's Beltsville, Md. research center, seven steers fed dust along with their rations gained about three pounds a day, compared with 2.3 pounds gained by seven animals fed normal rations.

State farmers sympathetic, but question strike's effect

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
Farmers from Kansas and Missouri expressed support Wednesday for the ideals of the national farmers strike, but it was not immediately clear how much support or what effect the actual strike would have.

"Everybody I've talked to...about the strike, although they may not be personally involved, are real sympathetic to what they're trying to accomplish," said Richard Basore, who farms wheat, milo, corn, hay and raises some cattle on about 2,000 acres near Bentley, Kan., a small community 25 miles north of Wichita.

"Farmers are in such a tight pinch, we've almost been in a buying boycott position for some time because we couldn't afford to purchase new machinery. I had a $40,000 combine on order, and I canceled it two or three months ago," he said.

While many farmers in both states apparently decided to wait and see what their neighbors did in response to the strike, others met in demonstrations and public rallies.

ABOUT 250 pieces of farm machinery from eastern Kansas and western Missouri blocked late morning traffic in Kansas City, a city that depends on agriculture for much of its income, as they lumbered to a rally at the American Royal Arena.

"We can't do this any more," said George Corbett, a Knob Noster, Mo. farmer who grows grain on 1,600 acres. "Every crop we plant cost us more to plant than we get out of it. Only a fool would keep doing this."

"I'm going to do this one more year, and if I don't make money this year, I'm going to sell out and quit."

How to convince Mom and Dad to pay for your Spring Break extravelganza

Check boxes, clip out, mail to parents.

Dear Mom and Dad,

Thought I'd surprise you by writing a letter once. Things are swell here at college except, of course, the food, which is so bad that I'm ☐ down to 91 pounds ☐ living on salt water ☐ eating out every night.

Well, since it's almost that ole Holiday Season again, I thought it was about time to start thinking about ☐ grades ☐ alka-selzer ☐ my Christmas list. Did I say Christmas list? Well, let me tell you about the greatest thing that's happened to this campus since ☐ Aggieville ☐ KSU Basketball ☐ Student Government. Over Spring Break, the UPC Travel Committee has set up a ☐ Padre Island trip for only $129 ☐ Florida trip for only $209 ☐ Ski the Summit trip for only $172.

NOTE: For those who checked Padre Island or Florida, read paragraphs A and B only. And for those who checked Ski the Summit, read paragraphs B and C only.

(A) Well, remember when I ☐ broke my leg skiing ☐ asked for a horse ☐ held that wild party over Spring Break? And you told me that ☐ I should have gone on a sun trip ☐ it was too expensive ☐ I shouldn't come home next year? Well, I decided that you were right and that I ☐ should go on a sun trip ☐ don't like horses anymore ☐ won't come home. And realizing that you ☐ don't want me to break my arm this year ☐ want to save money ☐ would worry about your poor little baby; I decided that all I want for Christmas is ☐ to go to Padre Island over Spring Break ☐ my two front teeth. ☐ to go to Florida over Spring Break ☐ got so sun burnt that I couldn't move ☐ laid around the house during Spring Break ☐ trip-

(C) So Dad, next time we get together, I want to tell you about my part-time job ☐ how I suddenly realized what a truly wise and magnanimous fellow you are ☐ thanks for making my Spring Break trip possible.

Opinions

Don't throw away class assignments

The Student Records Office, in announcing it plans to throw away class assignments if students fail to pick them up on time, has chosen some pretty weak arguments to back up its decision. It should reconsider.

Student Records Director Don Foster said all schedules will be discarded when the registration lines close on Tuesday, Jan. 17. His reasons for tossing them are first, to give teachers a more accurate class role on the first day of classes and second, so those students who enroll late won't be holding class spaces which might be available during drop-add.

To remedy that problem, his office will throw away the schedules regardless of student classification or how desperately he or she might need the classes.

To begin with, the very nature of drop-add makes "accurate class roles" on the first day of classes a contradiction in terms.

Also, just because a student arrives on campus late, he or she is not holding classes which might otherwise be available. If a student goes through the trouble to pre-enroll, it's safe to assume that only extraordinary circumstances will keep him from not registering.

If a student gets kicked out of school, he won't be using his class schedule. In those cases, the records office can merely let itself know who won't be returning by virtue of dismissal. And if another situation arises which forces a student to pull out of school, that's fine.

But don't toss out between 300 and 500 schedules just because students aren't back on time.

If a student returns late, a late registration fee is paid and that's that. It makes no sense to make the process even more inconvenient than it already is.

Some students, especially seniors and graduate students, must carefully and painstakingly select their classes in order to graduate or get post-graduate degrees. It's asinine to put this in jeopardy for such trivial reasons.

Chainsaws vs. sex

The Union Programming Council, the same folks who gave serious thought to censoring Immoral Tales last semester, now bring you a girl on a meathook (and later in a freezer) and a demented would-be lumberjack who has turned his energies not to trees but to humans.

Immoral Tales, a film of questionable merits but one which nonetheless won foreign film awards, came close to being cancelled because of its content, i.e. sex.

The council apparently has no qualms, however, about showing violence for the sake of violence; a film absolutely void of artistic quality.

Censorship is abominable, and taste (while relative) is still taste. A dose of consistency is in order for future movie selections. Because most students would still prefer a "racy" foreign flick rather than a service station attendant serving smoked human to his customers.

Killing a Tuesday night

Years from now, I will take a walk down memory lane and recall my days as a city reporter for the K-State Collegian.

Besides the unpleasant topics—the murders, rapes and beatings I helped cover—there were the more refined, lofty subjects to write about, such as the Manhattan City Commission.

Admittedly, things can get pretty wild in the commission room on occasion, but emotions are usually contained by the commissioners, true gentlemenly types that they are.

Oh, how I marveled the first time I witnessed Commissioner Bob Linder demand more discussion time directly after Mayor Russell Reitz had called for a vote.

Reitz (whom the city staff unanimously agrees sounds just like James Stewart) would wince terribly as if he was suddenly stricken with a great pain, turn somewhat red, pause and then say, "All right Mr. Linder, what is it that you would like to discuss?"

WHEREUPON a grinning Linder would launch into a lengthy statement, expounding in earnest about the possible loopholes and pit-traps which the citizens of Manhattan may fall into if the commission isn't prudent about the matter at hand (during which Mayor Reitz would be glaring at the table, drumming his fingers, face contorted as if he had bitten into a lemon).

Commissioner Henry Otto III, who prompted the comment, "Awww, he's so cute," from one of our female reporters, would be making funny faces at the gallery—first looking confused, then surprised, then perplexed—pausing in his routine periodically to apply Chapstick to his face.

The other junior commissioner, Terry Glasscock, would be sitting beside Otto looking very pious and proud. When Glasscock speaks, he almost opens his eyes.

Commissioner Bob Smith turns in perhaps the best performance when it comes to suppressing his emotions which, at times, are aroused. The first signs of tenseness that the alert reporter can spot is Smith holding his beet-red face in his hands, rubbing his temples. Then he will, in complete silence, slowly raise his head and stare with bulging, unbelieving eyes at his fellow commissioners with a look of utter loathing and contempt. But seldom does he actually speak unkindly to his comrades.

I will always remember these dedicated men for whom I have sacrificed study time and dates with pretty girls for the chance to write about their nocturnal get-togethers.

It's been a refreshing experience to see a group of legislative officials who aren't afraid to be themselves as they carry out their duties.

I saw no pompous, stuff-shirt types who were more interested in lining their own pockets than serving their constituents.

These men seem to be serious about doing their jobs, with no punches pulled.

Give pledges a chance

Editor,

It is discouraging to hear the opposing views of dorm residents to the colonization of Delta Gamma at K-State.

The need for another sorority is indicated by the large number of girls who participate in rush, and yet are not able to pledge a sorority due to the lack of space. Most of the girls who do go through rush are freshmen, and whether they pledge a sorority or not they are required by the University to live in a residence hall.

Therefore, it makes little sense to refuse a group of freshmen women the request to live together within the dorm system simply because they are pledged members of a sorority. Surely a group of women who request to live together on one floor or corridor should not have that request denied.

Chet Peters, vice-president for student affairs, was quoted in Monday's Collegian, stating "We house any group that expresses a desire to live together, and this, I feel, has set the precedent for housing."

THE QUESTION, really, is this: Should these pledges, who as freshmen are required by the University to live in a residence hall, be allowed to live as a group, or must they be spread out through the dorm system and ultimately, does it really matter?

What difference does it make whether the T shirts they wear identify them as dorm residents or greek members? It is sad that feelings of animosity exist between these two groups even to the point that sorority members are shunned and their rights as students to live in University-provided housing are challenged.

Hopefully, by allowing Delta Gamma to colonize and live as a group within a K-State residence hall, the two groups could learn to accept each other, possibly eliminating the misunderstanding which obviously exists now.

Farm column shallow

Editor,

Tim Horan's column on the farm situation reflects a lack of depth; Mr. Horan does not look beneath the surface of the predicament to the underlying causes.

Farmers do not view government intervention as the most desirable means to achieve parity. However, the failure of the free market system in past years has left them with no choice but to rely on government-sponsored programs to help them cover costs of production.

Horan's proposal that farmers "simply take next year off" would be an effective means of eliminating surpluses, but it would not be a very helpful tactic to generate farm revenue to pay land payments, property taxes, household bills, storage costs on stored grain, etc; which in past years have exceeded income obtained from full production farming.

Horan states that fears of food shortages are not justified. This may hold true with grain reserves, but grocery store meat counters will suffer quickly as soon as the cattle and hogs now in packinghouse holding pens are butchered and distributed.

FINALLY, Mr. Horan thinks farmers made mistakes by buying more land and new tractors when wheat prices were $4 a bushel. However, when profit margins per acre are as low as farmers are accustomed to experiencing, increasing acreage is one of the only methods available to increase net income, especially when practical means for increasing production per acre have been exhausted. The increase in tractor sales brought about by higher grain prices was a result of many farmers who needed new equipment years before finally being able to replace it, much as industry must replace its capital items when they are antiquated.

I appreciate Tim Horan's support of the farmers, but I think his column views missed many of the hidden realities of the agricultural community's plight.

Signs frivolous

Editor,

The more I see, the more I'm convinced the University administration's motto really is, "if it defies logic, do it."

The latest example of ill-logic is the stone building marker in front of Willard Hall. That little landmark cost us around $1,000.

Is this the University's subtle way of telling us that it really has nothing better to do with one thousand dollars than spend it on a building marker for a building most of us recognize anyway? I hope not.

I can't believe that nothing can be done to improve our campus. How about enlarging Farrell Library's collections or making campus buildings more accessible to the handicapped?

Surely there are a lot of ills on campus that $1,000 would cure.

Maybe the next Collegian write-in contest could ask how K-Staters would use $1,000 to improve the campus.

Peanuts has purpose

Editor,

I would like to comment about the letter which suggests that the Collegian drop Peanuts for a "more humorous comic strip." After leading a dismal life, Charles Schulz himself calls it the epitome of unachievement, for 25 years he got his opportunity to sell his new cartoon strip to United Features Syndicate in 1950.

Schulz believed that readers might become confused with other definitions of the title which they gave his work. It is clearly evident from the Dec. 13 letter that such is the case.

Peanuts rewards its admirers with insights into the child's mind without descending to the cliché-ridden comic strips. It's unfortunate that some people cannot grasp this fact and see the underlying purpose of the situations which Schulz creates. In his work, he depicts the patience and tenacity of Charlie Brown which are characters of his own personality.

The whole ordeal of Charlie Brown's life illustrates the fact that the little fellow with a problem who, because he is unable to do anything about it, has to wait until something happens. There's no use in trying to solve all your problems in one day.

If it's Schulz's credibility you doubt, here are some facts you should be acquainted with before you incorrectly label his art as uninspirational and unhumorous.

In 1955, he was named Outstanding Cartoonist of the Year by the National Cartoonists' Society and awarded its "Reuben" (the equivalent of an Oscar). The National Educational Society has honored him and in 1956 Schulz won the Yale Honor Award as Outstanding Humorist of the Year. Need I say more?

Granted, Peanuts does not always offer "quick, easy humor." I oppose the perverted view that "each college student looks for something easy to grasp that will lift his spirits, if only temporarily."

What Peanuts does offer cannot be found in a brief glance. If it's "inspiration" you are searching for each day both Schulz and I recommend that you read the Gospel of St. Luke which says, "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea than he should offend one of the little ones."

Appointment of recent grad to Regent's seat 'promising'

By MARY WOOD
Collegian Reporter

The appointment of a recent college graduate to one of the two upcoming vacancies on the Kansas Board of Regents looks promising, according to Terry Matlack, student body president.

Members of the Student Advisory Council to the Regents are calling on Gov. Robert Bennett to appoint a recent college graduate to one of the positions. The terms of Regents John Montgomery and Elmer Jackson expire on Dec. 31, 1977.

"Because of the quality of the individuals, we've (the Student Advisory Council) submitted, I think the chances look good," Matlack, chairman of the committee, said.

THE COUNCIL will nominate Howard Moses, a 1975 graduate of Emporia State University; Chris Lamb, ex-Student Advisory Council member and former student body president and a 1977 graduate of Pittsburg State University (PSU); and John Roger Jeter, a 1977 PSU graduate. The nominations will be presented to Gov. Bennett for consideration.

"The people we've submitted are not newcomers," Matlack said. "All have been involved in student politics and are currently involved in politics in general."

"They've all had good recommendations (from their employers)."

Leroy Towns, press secretary to the governor, said Bennett would consider the recent college graduate suggestion along with the other recommendations.

"Gov. Bennett will take a serious look at all the names submitted and will make his decision based on who's the most qualified," Towns said.

"I don't think he'd have anything against as recent college graduate."

TOWNS couldn't pinpoint the number of nominees but said there have been many.

"In the past, the board has drawn a lot of interest from

Things that go bump at night victimize Moore Hall women

More than 10 Moore Hall women have suffered losses within the last week in the largest series of burglaries ever at K-State, according to Bryce Romine, Security and Traffic investigator.

"Moore has been hit hard in a week's period," Romine said. "The burglaries were primarily in unlocked rooms with no forced entry."

Romine said he currently is following several leads.

At least four rooms on the eighth floor were burglarized, and women on several other floors also suffered thefts, according to Kris Abrahamson, sophomore in landscape horticulture, who said more than $20 was taken from her room Dec. 6.

Abrahamson's roommate, Kathy Gromer, sophomore in microbiology, said she lost some money and a $100 calculator.

"We think they were stolen various people," he said. "It's a very prestigious group."

Matlack said he has no idea how much impact the Student Advisory Council's recommendation would have on the decision, but was optimistic about the results.

"He's worked very well with us and been receptive to the students' interests," Matlack said.

Towns said Bennett will announce his decision the first of January.

during the night when we were in bed," Abrahamson said.

Money, basketball tickets and cigarettes were stolen from other Moore residents, Abrahamson said.

Velda Vasey, eighth floor staff assistant, said she is encouraging residents to lock their doors during the night and while they are away from the room for short periods. Signs have also been posted to remind residents to take precautions.

Record at campus dorms less damaging than others

By CECILIA KASL
Collegian Reporter

Damage at K-State residence halls is at a minimum this year as K-State continues to have less damage than other area schools, according to Housing Director Thomas Frith.

"Our students are especially careful of other people's property," he said. "Our willful damage is smaller than other schools. It is done by a smaller number of people."

"The greater portion of damage is caused by carelessness," Frith said. "I would say that less than $2,000 is spent for hall damages on the average not attributed to an individual."

Damages attributable to a specific person are paid for by that person, Frith said. Those not attributable are paid for by the hall or floor social and educational fund.

RESIDENTS are required to complete a room condition card before occupying and leaving a room. These cards are kept so that new students are not charged for damages done by the previous tenant and as a record for corrected damages, Frith said.

The hall directors decide whether the student should pay for the damage because they are closer to the situation, he said.

"We have a minimal amount not paid for by the people," Jim Putnam, Haymaker Hall director, said. "Our main goal is to educate the residents so that they come forward and pay for damages that they do."

"We do this mainly by making them aware that if damages occur in the hall, it comes out of their social fund and then it affects everyone."

"The big thing I've pushed in the hall is to make them aware of the facts that if they see something happening to make a mental note of it or to confront them (the person is the act)," Putnam said. "We have cut down on damages considerably just by using this policy."

SHARON MITCHELL, Goodnow Hall director, said the loss of social fund money is a good incentive for the residents to report damage occurs.

"People who are witnesses often come forward and tell what happened," Mitchell said.

"It's a rather small percentage (paid for damages) when you consider the budget (for the social and educational account) is $6,000 for the hall. But it does take away things they could have done."

The money comes from the social and educational fund because the damage is done by the student and must be paid for by the student, Frith said. If this fund was not used, there would have to be an increase in housing rates or a decrease in certain services to cover the cost of the damages.

THE HALL director and Housing Maintenance decide whether the damage is beyond the normal wear and tear of the item.

"The last couple of years we have had a number of sinks crack," Deb Collins, West Hall director, said. "This was damage beyond the wear and tear that no one seemed to be responsible for so it was taken out of the floor's social fund."

"One floor had fund raising activities to pay for the sink so that it wouldn't come out of their social fund," Collins said.

Goodnow spent about $200 to $300 last year for damages done in public areas, Mitchell said. This year, the front picture window and the replacement of two fire extinguishers were the main expenditures.

If an item is damaged in a student's room but does not need to be replaced, the difference for the shorter life of the product is charged to compensate for the reduction in the normal lifespan of the item, Frith said.

A statement would be attached to the student's housing bill or he may receive a specific bill at the end of the year for damages he caused, he said.

Prompt assistance requests urged to avoid lack of funds

A possible shortage of funds at Student Financial Assistance (SFA) may leave students without aid next year if they fail to apply early, according to Jim Upham, associate SFA director.

The money for National Direct Student Loans and the work-study programs may be gone by early March, Upham said. Applications for 1978-79 are available in Fairchild 104.

Students need to submit a K-State Financial Aid Application and an ACT Family Financial Statement to the Student Financial Assistance.

From best dancer to best bad girl, radical remnants reveal their 'now'

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Collegian Reviewer

What really happened to the class of '65? Michael Medved and David Wallechinsky, two members of the high school class featured in Time Magazine, have written a coast-to-coast bestseller answering just that.

Time Magazine labeled the senior class of Palisades High in Los Angeles as "American youth suffering all the more from the huge imbalance.

"Instead of being Chinese, I could have had a broken nose, or a gimp leg," Carol Shen said. "It could have been anything. I mean, in high school, I just felt so different."

William Quivers, dubbed the invisible man, could only say, "Damn! I was numb for a while," upon hearing he would be the first and only black to attend the school.

Many endings to the soap opera like stories have ironic twists; such as the political scientist who wound up showing pornographic movies, and those which seemed destined to be, as in the student storekeeper who later became an accountant.

ANY AND all of this could have happened within any class in 1965, but only then. It was a period in time which differed from all others in that some of the most radical changes in the youth culture took place.

Those that had a cognitive realization of this era can identify with this book, and those that don't can learn from it.

Appropriately placed at the beginning of the book is a piece written by Charles Dickens, which seems to sum up the whole idea. It begins:

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times..."

Honey learns to fly legendary wings

By VELINA HOUSTON

Arts Editor

She is the wife of the late, great non-conformist comedian Lenny Bruce; and the mother of their 22-year-old daughter, Kitty, with whom she is finally sharing a meaningful relationship.

The time has come, however, to stop referring to her as an appendage of others' lives, a spot only indirectly in the limelight.

She is Honey. Honey Bruce. An individualist, a doer.

A YOUTHFUL voice answered the telephone in her suburban San Francisco home with a simple, inquiring "Hello?" The next voice was Honey Bruce's.

It was Honey—11 years after the death of her "precious funny man," eight years since she had kicked a heavy heroin habit, and five years since her daughter finally had consented to come visit her. Her love for her daughter being one of the most consuming aspects of Honey's life, Kitty was the first question.

"That was her that answered the phone!" exclaimed Honey. "She's visiting me now. This is the best visit we ever had." From a very young age to 17-years-old, Kitty had been raised by Lenny's mother, harboring resentment toward her own mother for not being around in her growing years.

Honey, who is recuperating from a recent accident, completed a national tour last year with her autobiography, "HONEY: The Life and Loves of Lenny's Shady Lady," and is planning a college speaking tour when she is well.

"MOST OF the reviews of my book have been very favorable," Lenny Bruce's 'Shady Lady' unveils the truth behind her shiksa goddess image

By BRAD HENSON
Contributing Writer

Born of Irish, French, Swedish and Cherokee descent under a Leo sun in Arkansas, Harriet Jolliff was the daughter of one of many poor country families of the era. It may or may not have been in the stars, but that baby was destined for a remarkable future.

Who is Harriet Jolliff? Realistically, Harriet isn't anymore. She grew into Honey Bruce—the wife of the late Lenny Bruce—and has chronicled her life in an autobiography entitled, "HONEY: The Life and Loves of Lenny's Shady Lady," which was co-written with Dana Benenson.

Harriet's father abandoned their family when she was three and her mother moved to Detroit to find work. Her next marriage was to a bookie who posed as a late-night bookstore owner. His strict Catholicism, hypocrisy and arrest jarred Harriet's innocence and was her first encounter with a long life of pain and persecution.

AT 15, Honey was born. She left home on a final fling to Florida with army friends who were leaving for the war, had her first job as a chorus girl, was raped in a cemetery and finally busted for breaking and entering a gas station (trying to get gas to go home, no less).

She was sentenced to a year in state prison. Such a sentence, especially in a southern prison at that time, is bound to open eyes to a lot of things—Honey was no different. The strict caste between black and white led to many difficulties for the red-haired beauty, being non-racist and rather innocent. She spent many long days in the "hole" for what was termed as insubordination, and learned the art of surviving the hard way.

Upon release, she returned to her again-divorced mother in Detroit and started traveling with a Canadian carnival. She loved the stage and the "show business" words, words society did not want to hear. Honey became involved in a prison system as a victim society did not want to acknowledge. Their lives were being torn apart by courts, guilt, drugs and even sex. The two loved and needed each other, but it was hard to get close when times for both were so rough. Honey talked but was never heard. At least they listened to Lenny.

When he was down, Lenny would cite a poem that Honey recalls in her autobiography:

They always, always pick on me
They never, never let me be
I know what I'll do
I'll swallow a worm
And then I'll die
And they'll be sorry
That they picked on me

On August 3, 1966, Lenny swallowed the worm he so often threatened and died from an overdose of heroin.

Lenny screwed up his own life, Honey hers. The two were made for each other; she provided the love and inspiration for him to go on. When she left, he died. Lenny was a fighter, not a survivor. He fought for the right to say the unspeakable. He said words are only words, but he mastered them as a sculptor and his clay.

BUT HONEY lived. She lived the words Lenny spoke; she is a living reason why we are all still fighting the battles Lenny Bruce started. Honey has been to the lowest pit of society and survived. If Lenny seemed ahead of his time, Honey must have led his way. "HONEY: The Lives and Loves of Lenny's Shady Lady" is written in a familiar style, easy to relate to and sometimes quite eye-opening.

of moving her body and later became a rising star of the East Coast stripper world. She became a hot item, "Hot Honey Harlow" to be exact, and learned many new worlds—from a lesbian affair to drug usage, and Lenny and his "skirting the Establishment" life.

LIFE WITH Lenny Bruce was hard for Honey. She and co-author Benenson paint it honestly: the love and the laughter with the pain. Honey had six abortions, became hooked on heroin, had a daughter, and saw life fluctuate from rags to riches several times. Drugs became the center of their married life; love and laughter, their fix.

Lenny became involved with his thing it did was get my dad some deserved attention. It got people to know what my dad wanted."

And what, in the words of Lenny Bruce's only child, was that? Kitty grew silent, laughed warmly as if recalling her father and answered after asking Honey's opinion.

"Wow, what a question to think about!" She hesitated. "Daddy would have wanted..." again she hesitated and then burst out determinedly.

"Oh, just look around today," she said. "There's so much injustice in the world. Dad just wanted to do his act, say what he wanted to say. He wanted artists to have the freedom to do what they wanted without being persecuted for it. The film just didn't say enough."

HONEY HAS come a long way from Manila, Arkansas, and the farm on which she was born. She was Harriet Jolliff then, and the Honey who exists today was born of many physical travels and mental trips.

To recall a few events of her episodic life which Honey uninhibitedly discusses in her autobiography: a prison sentence at age 17, a bad marriage, a meaningful lesbian relationship, six years of marriage to Lenny Bruce, six abortions, a heroin habit and the death of her Prince Charming.

Still, Lenny's "shiksa goddess" with her heart of gold has managed to outlive the pain and not be hampered by the shadows of her past. Currently working on a screenplay of her book with hopes of selling it, Honey stressed human freedom as she discussed issues of the day.

"I BELIEVE people are entitled to their own personal preferences—color, creed, race and, yes, sexual preference," she said.

"The racial situation in America now can't compare with the way it was when I was growing up. Different races are getting along better, and northerners and southerners, too."

Honey's liberal, non-racist attitude caused her problems throughout her life.

"Besides," she added, "I think a majority of Americans are (racially) a combination of many things."

In terms of the women's movement, Honey said women don't know how lucky they are.

"I'm involved in the movement in only a small, small way," she said. "Whenever I get the chance to talk with some young ladies, I tell them one thing and that is that we (women) don't realize our own power. We're the ones who have the babies. We have the first opportunity to make it, shape it into any kind of human being we want it to be."

HONEY reiterated her stand on basic human freedoms as she discussed Anita Bryant's past crusade against homosexuality.

"Anita Bryant is crazy!" she said with a confident laugh. "She has been forced to stop what she was doing because she was being a fanatic about it and it was wrong anyway."

"Double-gated or not, everyone is entitled to his own personal sexual preference and privacy. What does she consider a normal sexual deviation—not bisexuality but perhaps making it with a horse?"

(see NEW, p. 9)

on the fringe of a golden era." Medved and Wallechinsky reveal whether that assumption tarnished or was just glittering with generalities.

The authors traveled extensively to get the interviews used to compile this book, utilizing first person tape recorded statements from former class members about themselves and their classmates.

AFTER EACH person's life is unfolded briefly within the confines of a few paragraphs, they draw their own assumptions on the relative success of each life after 10 years.

The interviews, all but two using real names, are surprisingly frank, possibly indicative of the openness of the era. Many of the persons interviewed admitted to various degrees of promiscuity, hard drug use, crime and general socially unacceptable behavior.

For example, Lisa Menzies, labeled by her class as "the bad girl," said: "I kept a running list. I counted four hundred and twenty-five, and then I stopped counting."

SOME OF these interviews, many meriting "True Confessions" publication, lend to more introspective memoirs of high school; such as so-called intellectual Lee Grossman's statement of "One of the most incredible inhumanities I can conceive of is high school gym class," and Sally Lobherr's (best dancer) "It was okay being average, because then you weren't noticed and you didn't have to perform."

A pressing issue at the time of graduation was the draft and figuring out ways to avoid it. Every tactic imaginable is mentioned, including being obese, underweight, mentally disturbed or physically IV-F.

The most commonly used, however temporary, was the student deferment (depending on which seemed more detestable: war or school).

ALTHOUGH integration had not yet hit Palisades High full force, it had its few minority members—

Queen produces crowning effort in new album

By VELINA HOUSTON
Arts Editor

Queen's sixth album, "News of the World," is not of the banner quality of "A Night at the Opera"—their first platinum—but the November 1977 release does headline.

Unlike its predecessors, which were completed over lengthy time periods and in a variety of locations, "News of the World" was completed in eight weeks at one London studio.

Written mainly on the road, it has emerged as a rushed royal statement which still manages to be musically fulfilling. Fattening at times.

The album offers 11 numbers ranging from cut-glass rock to soft, lyrical pieces which allow them the chance to display their interesting vocal talents, especially those of Freddie Mercury.

MERCURY: writer, vocalist and pianist; combines his talents to produce "My Melancholy Blues." Lyrically, the song has a four-in-the-morning flavor, when the party's over and the primal instinct hints its hunger:

"My baby left me for somebody new—
I don't want to talk about it
Want to forget about it
Want to be intoxicated with that special brew—
So come and get me—
Let me—"

Hmmm.
In "Get Down and Make Love," as the title indicates, the lyrics and music get funkier. The "let me" instinct is spelled out rather bluntly, both in words and heavy rhythms.

"SHEER HEART Attack" is the realization of Queen's third album's title. Queen drummer Roger Taylor takes on the guitar and vocals in a savage display. On this and "Fight from the Inside," Taylor is songwriter, bass player, rhythm guitarist and drummer.

Brian May, guitarist and vocalist, wrote and sings "Sleeping on the Sidewalk." The number is a finger-snapper and was created in an impromptu session. Its blues-driven feeling is spontaneous and this "warm-up" piece is one of the album's best efforts.

"We Will Rock You," another May creation born of more craftsmanship, has a beginning full of handclapping and foot-stomping which seem to request audience involvement.

Bassist John Deacon again displays his songwriting talents ("Best Friend"), and in "Who Needs You" he strikes the tasteful. It has a calypso beat produced by acoustic guitars, maracas and cowbells. Lyrically, it speaks of a bereaved fool in love versus a "spoilt" not-so-in-love girl.

"NEWS OF the World" has no disaster areas, although it throws enthusiasm for science fiction. It a few sharp curves in terms of style variation. Queen has saw fit, however, to catalogue cut glass on Side A and softer pieces on Side B.

The cover art work is a change from previous regally styled illustrations. Designed by illustrator Frank Kelly Freas, it clearly indicates the group's displays a bloody-fingered robot who has thrust his hand into a shell-like auditorium and is snatching up the members of the group.

Queen's abstract style has created its own conventions and rests successfully in their arms. This latest LP effort is news.

Live music drowned out by top 40 disco sounds

By BECKY BARTLETT
Staff Writer

The increasing popularity of disco music may be having some negative effects on the pocket-books of local and regional live bands.

Spinning of top 40 records is the main attraction of many recreation centers in Manhattan, whereas few taverns or clubs offer the entertainment of live music bands.

"Even if we try to get a band that plays disco music, if you've got a good sound system, people would rather listen and dance to a record that they know is going to be played at the tempo they're accustomed to," said Charlie Busch, co-owner of Brothers Tavern in Aggieville.

"So often, bands come in and play disco songs, but change the rhythm or the beat just enough that it makes it hard for people to dance to it," he said.

BUSCH SAID Brothers Tavern has tried in the past to bring in one live music group each week, but has decided to reduce this to one band every two weeks.

"We found that locally people just don't seem to follow live music that much," he said. "We used to bring in our live bands on Tuesday, but now we're having them on Friday. With the economy and everything, people just don't get out as much during the week."

Kennedy's Claim hires live bands for every Friday and Saturday night, according to General Manager Larry Crownover.

"I think live bands are something that this town wants," Crownover said. "I personally plan on some time in the future putting in live bands seven days a week."

CROWNOWER said he can't understand why more establishments in Manhattan don't use live music.

"I think live bands are something that will never go out of style. Now there are people that like disco, too, but I don't think live bands are something people will ever get tired of," he said.

"Live bands draw a crowd that would prefer live music over disco," he said. "People just like the idea of being able to see the band that's playing the music."

New life ahead

Her attention was caught by a dancer on her TV screen.

"I don't believe it! She's wearing less than what I wore on stage and she's on national TV—G string, pasties. Gee!"

SHE HAD dinner to fix for Kitty and tapes to finish. She was excited about her book, writing a screenplay and, yes, just being alive.

She is a person who did all of the things the media and the General Public talk about. She has been through so much, yet still can look at the world, almost child-like in her awe and appreciation.

Yes, Lenny Bruce was quite a man. He had to have been to have been loved so completely by a woman like Honey.

Crownover said they have never used disco entertainment at Kennedy's Claim since he has taken over, so he can't compare the differences in popularity between disco and live music.

"I just know when I have live bands I can't get everybody in here who wants in," he said. "I find I do better with live bands—people prefer to dance to live music."

"I THINK the disco sound has pretty much reached its peak of popularity," said Matt Bunker, junior in business administration and guitarist in "Evensong," a top 40 Manhattan band.

Bunker said he considers disco records as competition for live bands because they lessen the band's opportunity for work.

He said that although individual members of "Evensong" may have goals to make it to the top in music, he is in a rock band because it brings in financial support.

The band does not play any original music, he said.

"We play top 40 music because that's the most commercially advantageous to us," Bunker said. "Otherwise it's hard to get jobs. With top 40 music you can appeal to wider audiences."

K-Stater's play alternate choice for theater entry

By SCOTT WIBLE
Collegian Reporter

An original play by Cindy Helferstay, graduate student in theater, has been selected as first alternate to attend regional competition in the American College Theater Festival.

Helferstay's "Champagne and Feathers" will be performed in Omaha, Neb., if the winner is not able to compete. The top show from that competition will travel to Washington, D.C., to be performed at the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

"K.U. (University of Kansas) got first place," said Norman Fedder, associate professor of speech. "I talked to their director and it's possible they may not have the finances to go. If they can't go, we will."

SUCH FORTUNE did not happen for K-State in last year's competition when Charlotte MacFarland's "Armstrong" also was chosen as first alternate.

Fedder, however, is not disappointed by the decision of the theater festival judges.

At least one member of the "Champagne" cast will travel to Omaha for the festival. Mark Pennington, who portrays the Prince, will audition there for the Irene Ryan Outstanding Acting Award. Pennington is a sophomore in pre-design professions.

Jane Schultz, junior in music education, has also been entered in the same competition. She portrayed Pirate Jenny in K-State's production of "The Threepenny Opera."

Unnecessary violence, bad acting barbecues quality of 'Chain Saw'

"The Texas Chain Saw Massacre" is a monumental rip-off.

The hallmark of the movie is that it is the poorest movie to be shown in the campus community for a long time, not to mention its sickeningly violent plot—a maniacal family going around buzz-sawing teenagers to make barbecue meat.

Supposedly based on a true incident, the movie presents five teenagers traveling in a van one weekend to visit the ruins of an old family house.

Later on, the teenagers find the old house and go exploring. Two of the group go across a field and start looking around another old house. One of the pair sticks his head in a room and promptly goes into convulsions when his skull is crushed by a smashing blow from a sledge hammer wielded by some ugly fat man wearing an apron.

Producers' efforts full of tasteless humor as comic strip parody cheaply flashes flesh

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Flesh Gordon" will be shown at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Saturday in Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.25 with student ID.

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

"Flesh Gordon" is a silly parody of the old Flash Gordon serials. It features all the spaceships, ray guns and other gadgets popular in its originator, but relies little on any sophisticated parody for humor.

Instead, "Flesh Gordon" can best be described as kinky humor, full of countless sexual jokes and plenty of nudity.

Jason Williams stars as Flesh, whose lines could have been spoken by Jack Armstrong, all-American boy. He's a corny character, the typical good guy and hero.

Together with Dale Ardor (Suzanne Fields) and Dr. Flexi Jerk Off (Joseph Hudgins), Flesh flies to the planet Porno. Their

There are probably those who would find some entertainment value in seeing the dead man's companion, an attractive young girl, dragged screaming into a blood-soaked room of human butchery; lifted bodily into the air and plunged down onto a gleaming, sharp steel meat hook (where she is left to hang screaming).

THIS PARTICULAR girl's only other appearance in the gory farce is when she springs out from a freezer like a jack-in-the-box after her boyfriend hears rustling inside and unlatches the freezer door. Of course, the "bad guy" sneaks up behind him and dispatches him with a six-pound sledge hammer. The girl is stuffed back into the freezer.

The only people remaining of the original five are an invalid and his sister. When they go looking for their friends, the chainsaw man carves up the invalid and begins a marathon chase with the girl which takes them through high brush, hilly terrain and a few window panes.

noble quest is to defeat Emperor Wang the Perverted, leader of the planet.

WANG IS the film's token mad scientist. He's wreaking havoc on the Planet Earth with his sex ray. Anyone in the path of the ray is put immediately into a state of sexual frenzy. Obviously, this has caused a lot of confusion on Earth, and Flesh and company must stop him.

Not your basic science fiction tale, right? If you think the plot is bad so far, wait until you see the acting.

Well, good must always triumph, and the evil emperor and his sex ray must be destroyed. If good really does triumph, however, why wasn't the script to this movie destroyed before they had a chance to make the film?

IN THE film's introduction, the producers tell us of their love for Superman, Flash Gordon and Buck Rogers. These characters

The Neanderthals who made this movie obviously had no idea of the basics of photography, much less film-making. Many outdoor scenes were shot into the sunlight, leaving entire sequences bleached and faded in color—reminiscent of a poorly-shot home movie.

THE "ACTING" in this movie is equally atrocious. Apparently the producer-director made the film during a weekend outing with friends. None of the "actors" in this potboiler could make it as porno stars, although they have learned to grunt, groan and scream their lines with expertise. The greatest travesty in this whole cinematic mess is the sheer emptiness of the story. Why the family is making human barbecue is never answered, as well as what happened to them by the film's end.

"The Texas Chain Saw Massacre" is blood for the sake of blood. For poetic justice, the people responsible for bringing the movie to K-State ought to be chainsawed and hung from meat hooks.

brought relief, they explain, to persons living during the miserable 1930s.

"In the spirit of burlesque and satire," they then give us "Flesh Gordon," for today's troubled times. A person would have to be in terrible shape, however, to find relief in a movie like this.

Instead of coming up with what could have been a great satire of the superhero genre, "Flesh Gordon" contains almost nothing but gutter humor. The dumb plot, weak acting and extremely forgettable characters don't help matters.

If this sort of humor appeals to you, go see "Flesh Gordon." There is plenty to laugh at, and you don't have to be totally depraved to enjoy it.

The film certainly merits its R rating, so don't go with the old Flash Gordon in mind. You may enjoy the episode of "Flash Gordon" shown with the movie, but the film itself just isn't what fans are looking for.

Hunters must be responsible

While reading a magazine the other day I came across an ad for an electronic deer call. It made me realize how hunting and fishing have become mechanized since the days of "a boy and his .22."

Too many hunters today place the importance on the killing of the animal, and forget about the challenge of the hunt—after all that is why it is called a sport.

Many of these so-called hunters never get to realize the satisfaction of walking through dense thickets, over hills and down gullies and draws in search of game.

They find it much easier to ride in the back of their 4-wheel drives all day—many illegally at night—and hunt animals, then they call themselves sportsmen.

THESE HUNTERS are responsible for killing a large amount of animals every year. They are also the ones who kill game out of season and feel free to hunt practically in a farmer's backyard without receiving permission.

Without a doubt these people are hurting the sport of hunting. Man has assumed the role of keeping nature in balance, natural predators of many game animals are scarce in many areas. Without hunting, many animals will die slowly of starvation, disease and overpopulation.

Game officials set seasons and limits according to animal populations and the amount of licensed hunters. When hunters take game illegally or go out with the attitude of getting game anyway they can, all hunters must pay the price—the cost being lower animal populations and decreased limits.

THE TRUE sportsman and hunter is willing to get up before sunrise, scrape the frost off the window, and get out in the field in time to see the sunrise.

The sportsman will be willing to walk the brush and obey the laws for he realizes the importance of animal conservation. He is also the one who will get the biggest thrill and enjoy hunting the most.

There is a sense of satisfaction knowing you earned your trophy, be it a pheasant or an 8-point buck.

If hunting is to continue in the future, hunters must be willing to work towards recreating the respectability it once had.

Anti-hunting groups tend to present the bad side of hunting. Unless all hunters show that it is truly a sport, many who oppose hunting will continue to have negative examples to present and farmers will continue to tack up NO HUNTING signs.

Fighting Irish picked to defeat number 1 Texas in Cotton Bowl

NEW YORK (AP)—The Domino Theory, a contagious all-fall-down syndrome in international affairs, has the opposite effect in college football. When undefeated and top-ranked Texas falls down on Jan. 2, everybody else is going to stand up.

Notre Dame (10-1) is a three point favorite over the Earl Campbell-led Longhorns from Texas in the Cotton Bowl.

Oklahoma (10-1) is picked to give Barry Switzer's alma mater a rough time as the Sooners are 13-point favorites over Arkansas (10-1) in the Orange Bowl.

MICHIGAN STATE who surprised everybody by defeating Ohio State, is a 22-point favorite over Washington (7-4) in the Rose Bowl.

Speaking of Ohio State (9-2), Alabama (10-1) is a four-point favorite over the Buckeyes in the Sugar Bowl, a pick that should make all television cameramen take notice.

North Carolina (7-4), the breeding ground of new K-State coach Jim Dickey, is a seven point pick over the Cornhuskers from Nebraska (8-3) in the Liberty Bowl.

FLORIDA STATE (9-2) is a six point pick over Texas Tech (7-4) in the Tangerine Bowl.

Maryland and Minnesota (both 7-4) will compete in the Hall of Fame Classic but Maryland is a seven-point favorite.

Penn State (10-1), snubbed for a more prestigious bowl bid, is a 17 point favorite over the Sun Devils of Arizona State (9-2) in the Fiesta Bowl.

Pittsburgh (8-2-1) is a four-point favorite over Clemson (8-2-1) in the Gator Bowl.

SOUTHERN CAL (7-4), despite a horrendous second half of the season, is a seven-point favorite over the Aggies from Texas A&M in the Bluebonnet Bowl.

North Carolina State (7-4) is a six point pick over the Cyclones of Iowa State (8-3) in the Peach Bowl.

Louisiana State (8-3) is a six-point favorite over the Stanford Indians (8-3) in the Sun Bowl.

And last but not least, Louisiana Tech (7-1-2) could make former K-State coach Vince Gibson's Louisville squad (7-3-1) suffer in the Independence Bowl as Tech is a three-point favorite.

Wildcats burn Sun Devils, 101-74

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats proved Wednesday that there is at least one other college team in Kansas that can score more than 100 points in one ball game.

The Wildcats, currently ranked 19th in the nation, demonstrated why they deserve that honor as they completely demolished the Arizona State Sun Devils, 101-74, before 6,500 astonished fans in the University Activity Center arena in Tempe.

Curtis Redding scored an all-time personal high of 37 points and Mike Evans added 31 more to baffle and befuddle a demoralized

Sports

Sun Devil team. Evans came within three points of becoming K-State's all-time scoring leader, a record he should set Friday night in the Sun Bowl Classic in El Paso.

EVANS might have scored more had the Wildcats played better in the first half against the inspired Sun Devils.

Arizona State, led by the scoring of Kurt Nimphius and Blake Taylor, who combined for 25 first half points, dominated the Wildcats at both ends of the court and went to the locker room at half time with a 46-36 lead.

But K-State coach Jack Hartman must have said something to his players during intermission that had a profound effect on the Wildcats.

Arizona State started the second half and increased its lead to 12 points, but then the Wildcats began to make their biggest comeback so far this year.

THE WILDCATS gradually cut the deficit and took the lead with 12:20 left in the game and the Sun Devils were never able to catch up.

From that point on, K-State outscored Arizona State, 40-15, as Redding and Evans began to find the range, with Scott Langton and Steve Soldner adding key buckets.

Soldner finished the night with 13 points, Roiando Blackman, making his first collegiate start, added eight, and Langton finished with seven. Other K-State scorers were Keith Frazier with three and Thomas Freeman with two.

The Sun Devils were lead by Nimphius with 19 points and Taylor, also with 19.

The Wildcats will move on to El Paso Friday where they will compete in the Sun Bowl Classic. K-State is scheduled to meet Army in the opening round, with Memphis State battling host Texas-El Paso in the other game.

Grit and guts push Soldner to K-State's front-line corps

By LAURIE MILLER
Collegian Reporter

The competition and constant challenges are what makes basketball exciting for Steve Soldner, K-State's 6'7" forward from Farina, Ill.

"I love the game," Soldner said. "It's partly the competitiveness, always putting yourself and your team up against another, always being tested."

Soldner said this past summer he didn't know whether or not he would be starting, but the challenge made him want to work more.

"I didn't know what kind of chances I had of starting, and it really made me work a lot harder," Soldner said.

"I mostly worked on staying in shape. I lifted weights three times a week and ran twice a week. Then I worked on ball handling drills and quickness."

A PRODUCT of a small high school in Illinois, Soldner enjoyed other sports. In addition to playing basketball in high school, Soldner played baseball, ran cross-country and track.

"I wish I could have played football in high school, but maybe it was better that I didn't so that I had more time to concentrate on basketball," he said. "It was really convenient that I grew because I liked basketball ever since junior high. I had some older cousins across the street that got me started playing."

Soldner came to K-State two summers during high school for basketball camps.

Added dimension for basketball

Rec Services will add a new division to their intramural basketball program next semester. A Recreational Division will be provided for those individuals who aren't concerned with points and awards, said Intramural Coordinator Bill Harms.

Having fun will be the main purpose of the league. "This way somebody who just wants to have fun can play against somebody with the same philosophy," he said.

No records will be kept and there will be no playoffs. Each team will play a minimum of eight teams.

As in any other division, officials will be provided. Participants in the Recreational Division will not be allowed to participate in any division other than co-rec.

Persons interested in playing in the Recreational Division should sign up Jan. 20 in the Rec Services office, or they should call Rec Services at 532-6980.

"It was good for me because I learned a lot about things that I wouldn't have learned at home," Soldner said. "At the same time I met a lot of people at K-State and just really liked it."

When I started visiting other campuses my senior year, whatever school I went to, it seemed like I was always comparing it to K-State."

Soldner said he is grateful to the game of basketball for what it's done to mold his life in the way he thinks is best for him.

"If it weren't for basketball, I hate to think what kind of person I would have turned out to be," he said. "I'd probably be the biggest derelict in the world, because what would you do for excitement?"

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.) With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money. So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next January during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Energy conferees to continue meeting in an effort to end gas price deadlock

WASHINGTON (AP)—At President Carter's urging, Senate-House energy conferees agreed Wednesday night to continue meeting into next week in an effort to break a deadlock over natural gas prices.

A group of conferees reached this decision after meeting at the White House with Carter. Earlier in the day they had decided to recess indefinitely.

Rep. Thomas Ashley (D-Ohio), emerged from the White House and reported the conferees agreed to continue meeting "the remainder of this week and into next week as necessary."

Ashley said several members of the conference committees would cancel longstanding commitments to remain here for the deliberations.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said Carter told the group the job of fashioning an energy program would not likely be easier next year and might indeed be more difficult.

POWELL SAID Carter urged a continuation of efforts to reach a compromise. He quoted the president as saying he would not involve himself in the details of the matter but would be available if needed.

Eight conferees met with Carter for 40 minutes, then talked among themselves for more than an hour.

Efforts were launched, meanwhile, to pass separate legislation to renew President Carter's authority to deal with emergency national gas shortages.

Sen. Henry Jackson (D-Wash.), chairman of the Senate Energy Committee, said the Senate will be asked Thursday to vote to give the president this authority. The president had the authority last winter but would lose it if his energy program is not adopted by Congress.

Conferees met for more than two hours Wednesday but wound up no closer to agreement on whether to keep price controls on natural gas, as Carter wants, or to phase them out.

The panel voted to suspend its deliberations until Senate negotiators break a deadlock among themselves.

CONFERENCE CHAIRMAN Harley Staggers (D-W.Va.), said he would reconvene the panel even after Congress adjourns today if it looks like some progress could be made.

He said sessions as late as Christmas Eve were possible.

Failure to agree would set back President Carter's embattled energy program and could tie his hands in dealing with any gas shortage this winter.

That's because legislation renewing the government's power to move gas around the country to meet shortages in cold weather states is tied to the natural gas section of Carter's energy program.

Congress gave the president such authority last winter, during a prolonged cold spell which seriously reduced gas supplies, closed many industries and schools and forced thousands of workers out of jobs.

But these emergency powers have since lapsed. Nearly all the energy conferees favor extending this authority.

Feasibility study conducted on firm for fund-raising campaign

By TROY HORINE
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Endowment Association is preparing information on potential donors to determine whether a major fund-raising drive by an outside firm would be feasible among K-State alumni.

The decision to hire the firm will be made by the association's Board of Trustees.

"The research being done by our staff now must be done before we could invite a professional firm to do the study," said Larry Weigel, vice president for private support programs at the Endowment Association.

The research should be done within a year, he said. When it is completed, the University administration will decide whether or not to ask the Board of Trustees for approval to hire an outside consulting firm, Weigel said.

WEIGEL SAID other universities' experiences with fund raising indicate hiring a consulting firm is "essential."

Prospective donors probably will respond more candidly to an outside consultant rather than a K-State staff member in indicating which projects they would support and most likely invest money in, he said.

After the association identifies potential donors, a list of high priority needs would be given to the consulting firm to determine which projects would attract private support.

At the association's October meeting, K-State President Duane Acker listed seven needs the administration would likely recommend:

—Scholarships, especially for high-ability students.

—Endowments to finance distinguished professorships in individual colleges and departments.

—An experimental or intimate theater, likely an addition to McCain Auditorium, so the existing scene shop could be utilized.

—An art center.

—An endowment for continuous financing of K-State's Marching Band.

—Money to operate the Endowment Association itself.

—A new fieldhouse.

"The last major K-State fund-raising drive was in 1963," Weigel said. "That fund-raising campaign was in conjunction with the University's centennial and raised money to upgrade scholastic areas and for academic enrichment."

WEIGEL SAID the annual donations to the Endowment Association have grown from $33,000 in 1963, the first year for the association, to more than $2.6 million last year.

"At the end of October this year, we were up to about 2,400 in the number of persons giving to the association which represented about $360,000 more than last year," he said.

"The nature of fund-raising campaigns is largely dictated by the economy," he said. "The trend has been for assisted institutions to hold campaigns often to raise capital funds for new buildings and capital improvements which historically the state legislatures have financed."

Capitol Hill drops charges; Tongsun Park will testify

WASHINGTON (AP)—South Korean businessman Tongsun Park has agreed to the government's offer to drop bribery charges against him in exchange for his court testimony in the Capitol Hill influence-buying scandal, Park's lawyer said Wednesday.

William Hundley, Park's lawyer, said "only a few loose ends" are blocking an agreement with the Justice Department under which Park would return to the United States, probably after the first of the year.

"He is willing to come back and testify in certain trials if there are trials," Hundley said. "I want to get rid of the indictment. I want to get him immunity."

PARK, WHO was indicted by a federal grand jury for allegedly trying to bribe United States congressmen, has been the subject of intensive negotiations between the United States and South Korea over his testimony.

The wealthy one-time Washington socialite and rice dealer fled to South Korea when investigations began into the alleged influence-buying scheme.

He was indicted in absentia on 36 counts of conspiracy, mail fraud, bribery and failure to register as a foreign agent.

Testimony before congressional committees alleged that Park was part of a multimillion-dollar South Korean Central Intelligence Agency plan to use money and favors to sway influential congressmen and other U.S. officials in policy matters involving the Seoul government.

Thou shalt not run against pals; MCC elects four uncontenders

By CATHY NEIL
Collegian Reporter

After student council elections at Manhattan Christian College (MCC) were postponed one week because there was no competition for the seats, MCC Students went ahead and elected their four officers Wednesday from a slate of four candidates.

"We went ahead with the elections because the students really needed to have a choice," said Damon Roberts, former student council president. "With this election, there was a possibility of having write-in candidates and it also gave the students an opportunity to express approval or disapproval. It put the responsibility on the students."

Elected president was Cal Habig; vice president, Jim Donnelly; secretary, Julie Wolderidge; treasurer, Sue Donnelly.

"The main reason for lack of candidates is the time of year," Roberts said. "At the last of the semester students are under a lot of pressure. It is a time when you cannot be very objective about the next semester or year. Everyone is under pressure and doesn't want to think about doing anything extra."

SEVERAL students were interested in the offices, but most students know one another and many didn't want to run against friends who were enthusiastic, wanted the jobs and would make good officers, he said.

"There is a lot of leadership ability here," Roberts said.

"Lack of knowledge is a big problem," Donnelly said. "People were indecisive and hesitant to run because they didn't know what the jobs involved. There is a lack of knowledge of what student council does. Students see things being done but don't always know that StuCo is behind it. StuCo members don't relate well enough to the student body, especially off-campus students."

"Time is also a factor. StuCo has to be a priority for the officer or member," Donnelly said.

Apathy is also a problem, Donnelly said.

"About 10 percent of the student body is totally apathetic. Another 15 percent can be persuaded," he said.

Nip Jack Frost in the bud; wood-burning stoves save cash

By MAGGIE KRIEDLER
Collegian Reporter

The use of wood-burning stoves is on the rise. They're economical, relatively safe and all that's needed is a way to let smoke out of the building.

According to Lois Borg of Ashley, the use of a wood-burning stove in her home has cut the fuel bill nearly in half compared to last winter's bills.

Some owners of wood-burning stoves can cut fuel bills more if they have access to wooded areas and can cut the wood themselves.

ROBERT CLACK, professor in nuclear engineering, can testify to that. He owns two wood-burning stoves and uses about 50 pounds of wood a day in cold weather, which he cuts on his land.

The savings speak for themselves, Clack says. Last year his total propane bill was about $600 for a six bedroom house which has two furnaces.

Clack burns mostly dead wood, which not only costs nothing but its use clears his land of dead trees.

The sales of wood-burning stoves are increasing, according to Mike Kervliet, manager of one Manhattan distributor.

"We've had an increase in sales over the past year or year and a half...mainly in the cast iron and glass-enclosed stoves," Kerkvliet said.

SOME WOOD-BURNING stoves sold in Manhattan can hold enough wood to burn from 10 to 14 hours and need to be cleaned every 10 to 14 days, he said.

Kervliet said fireplaces can also be economical if they are well made. The best fireplaces have a thermograde and are enclosed with glass doors, he said.

A thermograde is a unit which draws heat from the fire and circulates it in the room, keeping it from escaping through the chimney. The glass doors keep air from escaping in the flue.

WHETHER using a wood-burning stove or a fireplace, one should consider that some wood burns better than others.

According to Bill Moyer, K-State extension forester, heavy density woods—oak, walnut, ash and locust—put out more heat. Light density woods—cottonwood and pine—burn well, but quickly, he said. Hedge wood also is good to use, but it pops so much that a good protection is needed over the wood, he said.

Moyer said the Manhattan area has a good supply of wood, but some regulations need to be observed in obtaining it.

The Tuttle Creek area is a good place to find dead wood. But only fallen dead trees in the federal park may be taken, he said. If dead wood is found in the state park, permission to take the wood must be obtained from the state park manager, he said.

Moyer said some farmers will allow cutting wood on their land if permission is obtained.

K-Stater goes to Rhodes scholarship district competition

Grace Hwang, K-State senior in political science, was one of two persons selected Wednesday to represent Kansas in Rhodes scholarship district competition.

Also chosen to represent Kansas during the district competition Saturday was Randy Miller, 24, a native of Downs and a 1976 Yale graduate. Miller currently is a legislative assistant for United States Rep. Keith Sebelius.

The pair was selected from 10 candidates interviewed by the state selection committee.

Hwang, 21, a native of Taiwan, will receive her degree in May after completing a pre-law course.

The two will compete Saturday at Manhattan against two representatives each from the five other states in the district, Nebraska, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri.

The 12 candidates will be vying at Manhattan for four Rhodes scholarships to study in England. The winners will be announced late Saturday by K-State officials.

Hwang, now an American citizen, came to the United States at the age of 6 when her parents left Taiwan. Her father, Ching-Lai Hwang also is a naturalized American citizen. He is an industrial engineering professor at K-State.

Hwang said she wants to study international relations if she wins one of the districts scholarships.

House approves tax hike to save social security

WASHINGTON (AP)—A compromise bill to rescue the Social Security system by raising taxes by $227 billion over 10 years was approved by House-Senate conferees Wednesday, apparently clearing the way for Congress to wind up its 1977 session today.

The extraneous issue that had deadlocked the conference, a $250 income tax credit for college tuition, was eliminated when Senate conferees persuaded the author, Sen. William Roth, (R-Del.) to delete it. This allowed a vote on the provisions to end Social Security deficits.

ROTH WAS promised consideration of his proposal next year.

The Social Security bill would raise taxes steeply after next year, especially for higher-paid workers and their employers. It was expected to clear both chambers today. The Senate was to act first.

Passage of the bill this month had been urgently sought by President Carter and the congressional Democratic leadership. Failure of Congress to agree in time on Carter's top priority measure, the energy package, threatened to leave the first session of the new administration with a do-nothing image.

Moreover, members of Congress were aware of the fears that had been aroused among retired persons and those soon to retire by the news that Social Security trust funds could run out by 1983 unless action was taken.

TWO KEY Carter proposals were deleted as the bill made its way through Congress. One would have used funds from the general treasury to help overcome Social Security deficits. The other, favored for a time by the Senate, would have increased taxes more on employers than on employees.

The compromise measure sticks with the tradition that payroll taxes are imposed equally on the worker and the employer, but raises the tax to new heights.

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: Answer:

How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Answer:

Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: Answer:

What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: Answer:

If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Farmers plot strike strategy

TOPEKA (AP)—Militant farmers and Kansas labor leaders, declaring a common interest in saving the family farm, mapped strategy Thursday for a joint effort at making the farm strike work.

H.J. "Jim" Yount, executive vice president for the Kansas Federation of Labor, AFL-CIO, pledged support for the strike and encouraged members to observe farm pickets at supermarkets and plants.

Ralph McGee, state executive secretary, cautioned that union members would have to make deliveries in cases where contracts prohibit interruptions.

"We'll do everything we can in the case of AFL-CIO members to encourage them to respect your picket lines when they can do it legally and without a violation of any contract," McGee told a group of western Kansas farmers.

"I can tell you one thing. If you put pickets in front of a Dillons food store, you're going to have damn few union men going in to buy any products," McGee said.

THE FARMERS met later with Teamsters Union officials in Topeka. A union spokesman said afterward the two sides discussed "what they are likely to run into based on our experience in the past, what is legal and so forth."

He said the Teamsters listened to the farmers but made no promises.

Jim Kramer, a farmer from Hugoton, said the purpose of the Thursday parley was to seek support and assistance from state labor officials. Dramer said both sides would benefit from a loose alliance.

"We represent only about 4 percent of the population," Kramer said. "We don't have big political clout. But as 30 percent of the consumers, we're important to these people."

Kramer said as an increasing number of family farms fail, jobs would be lost in industries which make agricultural equipment and related products. Further, as people leave the farm, they would compete for a limited number of jobs.

THE 10 farmers meeting Thursday with state AFL-CIO officials were among thousands across the nation who are on strike for higher prices. The farmers are seeking federal guarantees of parity prices for farm products and have threatened to stop buying and stop selling until that happens.

Earlier in the day, they met with a representative of Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, to discuss upcoming Senate hearings on the strike tentatively set for Jan. 7 in Kansas City.

Striking farmers in Abilene picket stores, force closing

By JETT ANDERSON
Staff Writer

ABILENE—Farmers from Dickinson county picketed the five grocery stores here Thursday in an effort to inform Abilene residents of the two-day old nation-wide agricultural strike.

Sponsored by the American Agriculture Movement (AAM) Local 13, the strike prevented the stores from taking any deliveries and several stores had run out of bread and milk by the middle of the day.

Store managers cooperated with the approximately 125 strikers and closed their stores between 10 and 11 a.m. to show support for the strike.

JOHN COVEN, one of a half-dozen farmers standing in the shade of a John Deere tractor in front of Boogaarts grocery store, said the purpose of the strike was not to close the stores but to inform the public.

"We are not trying to keep the people from buying groceries, we are just trying to get the people educated about the farmers' problems," Coven said.

Gordon Kippenberger, farmer and president of the Abilene Co-op, said the strike was stopping deliveries to the stores but was not interfering with the consumers.

"We have stopped all of the bread trucks since this morning. The manager here has cooperated real well; if he had come out here and told the driver to unload the truck, then we could not have stopped them," Kippenberger said.

"We haven't tried to stop people from going in, but there isn't any bread on the shelves—I don't think you can buy a loaf of bread in Abilene today."

ART SCHUETTE, manager of Boogaart's, said he agreed with the farmers and the strike even though it had hurt business at the store.

"They are just friends and neighbors trying to make a living and having a hard time at it," Schuette said.

"They are trying to get some recognition, some publicity. Nothing has ever worked for them before. "If it (the strike) will do some good, then I am all for it," he said.

Business was off at the Abilene Co-op, which also closed its doors for one hour Thursday morning, Kippenberger said.

Although Kippenberger was taking part in the strike, he said he was not recommending farmers boycott the Co-op.

"If you have got cattle, then you have to feed them," he said. "Besides, we don't have to tell them not to buy, they don't have the money to buy anything anyway."

MOST of the Abilene residents sympathize with the strike, some of the farmers said.

"Ninety-five percent of the townspeople have been really cooperative," according to Mrs. Leon Riffel, leaning against a station wagon loaded with food and hot chocolate for the one-day siege in front of West's IGA on the north side of Abilene.

One truck loaded with frozen foods was unloaded early Thursday at the A&P store in downtown Abilene because the food was perishable, but after it had been unloaded, a tractor had been parked in front of the truck and the farmers did not let the truck go until the end of the day-long strike.

Kenneth Pyke, manager of the A&P, said all of the food on the truck was marked with an "AAM 13" and would not be placed on the shelves until the end of the day.

"I agree the farmers have a problem—but I don't know if this is the way to handle it," Pyke said.

Elmer Jones, farmer, implement dealer and Dickinson county commissioner, said the only thing paying off for him right now is the county commissioner salary.

This is it

Due to a lack of pulp trees in Bwanaland, a typhoon which struck our ink shippers warehouse in India and a general strike by Typists Union Local No. 123, the Collegian decides to end it all today.

In honor of dead week, final week and Santa Claus, the paper won't publish again until Jan. 16 at the beginning of spring semester. Good luck on finals and have a great vacation.

Following students wants creates education disaster

LOS ANGELES (AP)—General education designed to give students a broad range of skills is "a disaster area" at most U.S. colleges and universities, with English and math especially neglected, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching said Thursday.

"Learning how to learn is one of the best investments that can be made for an effective life," the New York-based foundation said in a 312-page report.

BUT IT SAID said colleges more and more were "giving the students whatever they want," allowing them to divide two-thirds of their course time, on the average, between often "aimless" electives and narrow courses in their major subject.

"We also note that some departments (particularly the sciences and the professional schools) tend to be very greedy for the time of their students, and some control may be necessary over their imperialistic tendencies, so that they do not squeeze out general education," the report said.

Besides English and math, such skills as statistics and using library sources are frequently ignored, the study noted, and many schools no longer require a foreign language unless a student majors in it.

THE PERCENTAGE of colleges requiring all students to take English declined from 90 percent to 72 per cent between 1967 and 1971, the report said, while the percentage of institutions requiring math dropped from 33 percent to 20 percent during the same period and the percentage requiring a foreign language fell from 73 to 53 percent.

The report said many students entering college need basic English and math courses. It cited 1975 tests showing that 26 percent of entering freshmen at Ohio State University had not mastered high school math and 30 percent lacked acceptable college-level writing skills.

The study also said schools need to do a better job of preparing students for the outside world and recommended more programs like work-study, in which classroom instruction is combined with experience on a job.

THE REPORT, which took 2½ years to prepare, drew heavily on national surveys of student and faculty views and experiences, studies of hundreds of college and university catalogues, and visits by the Carnegie staff to scores of campuses.

'Big, creaky' UFM house offers student caretaker new home

Living alone in a big creaky house can be scary and even inconvenient at times, but it's worth it for Faith Kossoy, senior in bakery science management.

Kossoy lives in the University for Man (UFM) house, 1221 Thurston, as a housegirl. She is responsible for readying the house for evening classes and locking up at night. In return, she pays only $75 a month for rent.

Less library hours for vacation break

The hours for Farrell Library have been shortened for semester break.

Thursday the library will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Friday hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Beginning Saturday, Dec. 24, Farrell will be closed every weekend until Sunday, Jan. 15. It also will be closed Monday, Dec. 26 and Monday, Jan. 2.

Weekday hours from Tuesday, Dec. 27 to Tuesday, Jan. 17, will be 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Regular hours will resume Wednesday, Jan. 18.

Her apartment consists of a bedroom, bathroom and sitting room, but she has no kitchen facilities.

Kossoy said she misses having an oven because she can't bake cookies or entertain guests.

"Even though I don't have a kitchen, the dishes still seem to pile up," she said. "I take care of that. I just do them in the bathtub. I also do my laundry in the bathtub."

Kossoy says although the house is big, it's homey and she is comfortable in her small apartment.

When she first moved into the UFM house, Kossoy said she was worried about the lack of privacy.

"At first there was no door on my apartment so my living quarters were a part of the entire UFM house," she said. "During elections, people would come on in my apartment and ask to use my bathroom at 7:30 in the morning."

"But now I have a door which separates my apartment from the rest of the house and no one infringes on my privacy."

Mideast talks 'good'

CAIRO—The Cairo Middle East peace conference named a three-man legal team Thursday to lay groundwork for further talks, then adjourned for the Moslem, Jewish and Christian holy days. "The talks are good," chief Israeli negotiator Eliahu Ben-Elissar declared after Thursday's session.

The three-day respite, with sightseeing for Israeli delegates, coincides with Prime Minister Menahem Begin's crucial talks with President Carter in Washington. The outcome of those talks is expected to shape discussions here when they resume Monday.

U.S. officials told reporters returning to Washington from the Mideast Thursday with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance that Begin is showing "new flexibility" on the key issue of Israeli withdrawal from occupied West Bank of the Jordan River.

Vance was ending a six-nation Mideast tour and is to brief Carter before the discussions with Begin Friday.

Social Security bill passes...

WASHINGTON—Congress completed action Thursday on a bill that raises payroll taxes of 107 million Americans in an effort to keep the Social Security system in good financial condition for the next 30 years.

The House passed the bill 189-163 after the Senate had approved it on a 56-21 vote.

That gave President Carter the most important legislative victory of his administration. Congress then adjourned until Jan. 19.

The bill would raise payroll taxes by $227 billion over the next decade.

Few lawmakers were enthusiastic about the big tax increase. Most seemed to agree with Rep. Al Ullman, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, that "there isn't going to be any easy answer" to the problems facing Social Security.

...Agency pays too much

WASHINGTON—The Social Security Administration paid out $190 million too much in Supplemental Security Income benefits from October 1976 to last March, but the error rate went down, the agency said Thursday.

The percentage of overpayments was 6.3 percent, down from 6.9 percent in the period July to December 1976, when the overpayments totaled $210 million. More than $3 billion was dispersed to needy persons who were over age 65 or blind and disabled.

The agency said errors were made in nearly 15 percent of all cases, although the dollar amount of overpayments was 6.3 percent.

Mojave desert receives TV

ESSEX, Calif.—The news itself was the news here Thursday. For the first time the small Mojave desert community received television transmissions. And the first show seen was a news program.

"It just came right in—bingo," said Doug Smith. "And it's in color, too. This is about the best Christmas present you can get."

Smith had used his set as a bookshelf ever since he moved to this community about 200 miles east of Los Angeles, where the hills prevented television reception—until Thursday.

About 25 residents of the isolated community's 100 residents gathered at the center of town at the home of postmaster Jack Howard, waiting for the first sign of life from a new 21-inch color set borrowed for the switching-on ceremony.

'Blue flu' in Cleveland finds police chief beating streets

CLEVELAND (AP)—More than 1,200 of Cleveland's 1,500 police patrolmen called in sick with "blue flu" Thursday in a contract dispute and Mayor Dennis Kucinich sent even his new police chief Richard Hongisto out to help patrol the streets.

Kucinich, who himself took office only last month, complained about what he called "a full-scale walkout by police who are sworn to protect and assist the people," and threatened to suspend patrolmen and women taking part in the sick call.

Kucinich said he had discussed the possibility of calling on the Cuyahoga County sheriff and other law enforcement agencies for assistance but didn't feel such a step was necessary at present.

Kenneth Green, chaplain of the Cleveland Police Patrolmen's Association, said the association had not sanctioned the walkout.

Despite the walkout in the department, Kucinich said normal patrols were being maintained with the help of supervisors. He said 59 patrol cars were on the street—the normal number in this city of 750,000. Hongisto, sworn in Wednesday after leaving his post as San Francisco County sheriff, spent the afternoon cruising the streets in a car like a patrolman.

ABOUT 300 ranking officers were put on 12-hour shifts. They were supplemented by new graduates of the police academy, the chief said.

Green said the mayor and "his unqualified staff of bargaining agents," had failed to negotiate in good faith toward a contract.

The association is negotiating its first formal contract with the city since voters last year repealed an ordinance that gave policemen automatic raises to keep them 3 percent ahead of the next highest-paid policeman in Ohio.

The association has asked for an increase in starting pay from $14,069 to $18,500, plus fully paid hospitalization and a four-day, 40-hour work week.

How to convince Mom and Dad to pay for your Spring Break extravelganza

Check boxes, clip out, mail to parents.

Dear Mom and Dad,

Thought I'd surprise you by writing a letter once. Things are swell here at college except, of course, the food, which is so bad that I'm ☐ down to 91 pounds ☐ living on salt water ☐ eating out every night.

Well, since it's almost that oie Holiday Season again, I thought it was about time to start thinking about ☐ grades ☐ alka-selzer ☐ my Christmas list. Did I say Christmas list? Well, let me tell you about the greatest thing that's happened to this campus since ☐ Aggieville ☐ KSU Basketball ☐ Student Government. Over Spring Break, the UPC Travel Committee has set-up a ☐ Padre Island trip for only $129 ☐ Florida trip for only $209 ☐ Ski the Summit trip for only $172.

NOTE: For those who checked Padre Island or Florida, read paragraphs A and B only. And for those who checked Ski the Summit, read paragraphs B and C only.

(A) Well, remember when I ☐ broke my leg skiing ☐ asked for a horse ☐ held that wild party over Spring Break? And you told me that ☐ I should have gone on a sun trip ☐ it was too expensive ☐ I shouldn't come home next year? Well, I decided that you were right and that I ☐ should go on a sun trip ☐ don't like horses anymore ☐ won't come home. And realizing that you ☐ don't want me to break my arm this year ☐ want to save money ☐ would worry about your poor little baby; I decided that all I want for Christmas is ☐ to go to Padre Island over Spring Break ☐ to go to Florida over Spring Break ☐ my two front teeth.

(B) Remember last year when I ☐ got so sun burnt that I couldn't move ☐ laid around the house during Spring Break ☐ trip ped and broke your Ming vase? And you said that I ☐ should have gone on a ski trip ☐ was a lazy bum ☐ should take up bull fighting since I'm so graceful? Well, I decided that you were right and that I should ☐ go skiing over Spring Break ☐ broaden my horizons ☐ take up bull fighting.

(C) So Dad, next time we get together, I want to tell you about my part-time job ☐ how I suddenly realized what a truly wise and magnanimous fellow you are ☐ thanks for making my Spring Break trip possible.

Got to sign off now and go ☐ to class ☐ drop three or four courses ☐ check my mailbox to see if anyone sent me ☐ $129 for Padre ☐ $209 for Florida ☐ $172 for Ski the Summit.

Opinions

Articles appearing on this page do not necessarily represent the entire Collegian staff or the Board of Student Publications.

The past...

As someone said one time: You can't please all of the people all of the time, nor it seems can you please some of the people some of the time.

And as in most semesters in the past, such was the case with this fall's Collegian.

But with any bitterness, animosity, frustrations and even good times aside, it has been a successful and gratifying semester in Kedzie Hall's newsroom.

However, in the news business success and gratification doesn't mean readers have agreed with a newspaper's stands on and coverage of issues. It means doing your best to inform your readers and knowing by certain responses, be they good or bad, that the readers have received this information.

All readers haven't agreed, as they haven't in past semesters, with the way the Collegian has covered the news this semester. But different from some other semesters, these readers have also expressed this dissatisfaction directly to us, as evidenced by the more than 200 letters to the editor printed this semester. That's a credit to them.

There has been an extra effort this semester to be open and accessible to our readers. The staff even in an organized meeting with some student leaders explained our role and function as the student newspaper at K-State. We believed we should do that.

But we also believe that we should report and at times interpret the news whether people like the news or not. News doesn't always make people happy, but it is necessary that these people be informed of it anyway. And it's our job to inform them as fairly as possible. We believe we have.

Thanks for reading us.

JASON SCHAFF
Editor

...and the future

It would be easy for me to say that next semester's Collegian will be exciting and stimulating, because, idealistically, every new editor hopes his newspaper will become just that.

Newspapers rely on a world that is constantly changing, and often these changes provide the impetus for an exciting newspaper. But the people of this world are unpredictable and no one knows for sure what will fill the pages.

Areas that affect us all will be examined and more humor will be injected with the intention for betterment, not harm.

The Collegian will have the opportunity to cover a student presidential and senatorial election, the controversy over a new fieldhouse, two nationally ranked basketball teams and much more.

Each event will be covered with professional objectivity and style, with the emphasis on the people that are a part of the event.

But readers must realize that the Collegian will not be compromised, nor will it be used to express one person's vendetta toward another.

This is not to say, however, that the Collegian will not listen to its readers. On the contrary, readers provide the news we report and the Collegian will always be open to those who have something to say.

I can guarantee the readers that the Collegian will listen, because with your help, we together can make K-State a truly educational experience.

Finals: Too late to repent?

Chaos and panic prevail. Pencils have no lead or eraser, pens are running out of ink. Notebooks once filled with pristine paper are torn and battered (and out of paper). That final exam seems an insurmountable, formidable obstacle.

Headaches blur the words on the page. Karmas do not know which way to go, there is no focus. AAAGggghhhh!!!! What is the use of studying when you haven't studied all semester? Because, THIS IS THE LAST CHANCE. No more opportunities to raise that C to a B or that D to a C.

THIS IS IT. The moment that brings evil smiles and twinkling eyes to your professor's face. His sadism is overwhelming.

With a concept of the face etched in your mind, you feebly begin.... "World War II involved Western Europe, Russia, Japan and the United States as primary actors."

"The lead of a story should include the essential facts." "If A plus B equals C plus C, what is C?"

"The atom is the smallest particle in the universe."

It all seems so el-e-men-tary. Why can't these simple statements become permanently lodged in the brain and why aren't they easy to regurgitate on an exam?

Aha! Mental attitude. If we think we know what we should know, then we know it. Right? No. If we know what we think we should know but can't remember, then we actually know it.

NOW THAT you know that you can know what you should know and what you should know you really do know, you probably are wondering what this has to do with the weather.

December is a cold, snowy month, conducive to the best of studying habits. The cold is always welcome in December so we will be able to stay home, in front of the space heater and concentrate on studying for those dingy, grimy, horrid final exams. There is nothing better to do.

January is the same way. The beginning of a new semester fills us with inspiration. A clean slate. No black marks, no missed assignments. How refreshing! And the cold, forbidding weather confines us to our studies. It is almost spiritual.

At least it was. Today is the 16th of December, the end of dead week. Finals are looming.

AND IT IS 60 degrees outside, the sun is shining, a gentle warm breeze caresses our faces as we stride, coatless, from class to class. The warmth seduces us. Invites us outside to enjoy the splendor.

No, this is hell.

We are receiving our punishment. We have sinned.

We have not studied all semester and this is our punishment. We wrongly procrastinated, believing the weather would be so vile as to allow us, no, force us to study for the FINAL.

The forces which control the weather are raining havoc on our misplaced conceptions of academia and the way things are done. We have become slaves of the weather.

Tension mounts. Wide-eyed panic pervades the silence of the library.

HOW CAN WE overcome the forces which seek to disrupt our last-ditch efforts for the higher grade?

Simple. Put on your winter coat, turn on the air conditioner. Place ice cubes in your shoes and mittens and FREEZE. But, for these measures to be effective, close the curtains and the windows.

Then, learn what you know you should know and what you really know you know and above all, keep calm at regurgitation time.

Letter to the editor

Dependable child care needed

Editor,

I was glad to see the editorial in Monday's Collegian in support of evening child care in Manhattan. For whatever reason (night classes, job or well deserved night out) Manhattan residents need quality, dependable, reasonable priced evening child care.

Parents know exactly what to expect from UFM's service. The staff members were competent, the facilities were good, and my daughter always looked forward to going back.

Teenagers often do not have experience with children, lack confidence in their ability to handle children and often are busy with their own affairs and can't babysit when needed.

I DON'T believe child care centers will institutionalize our children. Rather they offer interaction with other children, a variety of learning experiences and an opportunity for the child to explore his own interest.

My daughter is independent, mature and excited about learning. I feel her experiences in child care centers have helped her develop these positive traits and also helped her develop skills in getting along with people.

I sincerely hope the city commissioners will reconsider their decision regarding this valuable service to all parents in Manhattan.

Family farm's future at stake

Editor,

Participation in the American Agriculture Movement will not be 100 percent but it ought to be. This is the farmers' greatest effort at getting together and will probably be their last if it fails. That is why 100 percent participation is necessary.

Those farmers who have experienced the hard time and don't want the same for their sons and daughters will participate. Only those who are thinking only of themselves will not strike. Some of the farmers will have bills to pay.

A K-State economist has said that the farmers will be on strike until their notes are called in. If that banker is any kind of decent banker, he should be just as concerned about the farmers' plight as the farmers are. He should refinance rather than repossess.

IN MY opinion, the duration of this strike will only be a few months if participation is near 100 percent. Consumers should realize that the average American spends 16 percent of his income on food compared to 40 percent of other developed nations.

The American housewife wants a large quantity of high-quality food at the lowest price possible. The farmer wants to receive cost of production plus a little profit.

There is a point where food can get too cheap for consumers and too high for the farmers. It is too cheap when it isn't profitable for the farmer to produce quality products and too high when the consumer won't buy them. Parity price is an appropriate median between these extremes.

Southwestern Bell and the Kansas Power and Light Company demand a 6 percent return on their investment to maintain their services. Farmers are not asking for 6 percent, they want only to cover the cost of production plus a little extra.

Southwestern Bell and K P and L will get their increases through higher utility bills. If farmers are able to to receive parity, it will show up in the form of a higher tax bill. Just like everything else, if you want to continue receiving quality services, you are going to have to pay for them whether you like it or not.

I think it is time our government steps in to help our agriculture. Farmers are going to have to control production and thus lose some of their freedoms.

However, it is either this and maintain the competitive family farm or live in fear of our food supply being controlled by a few oligopolistic corporate farms. The choice is ours. I feel we had better support the strike.

Strike: The farmer's only alternative

Editor,

In response to the column by Tim Horan, I happen to disagree with the opinion put forth on the farm strike. The farmers of this country have been trying throughout our history, to get a fair and equitable farm program through conventional methods. We even organized a political party, the Patrons of Husbandry (better known as the Grange), to accomplish this. Needless to say it failed.

With a crisis such as the one farmers are facing today a strike is needed. It is the only feasible way of proving to the people of this country that the farmer is a power to be reckoned with. Without the agricultural output the American farmers supplies we would be much less industrialized than we are.

THE 100 percent parity is another issue here. This is comparable to the minimum wage most employed persons receive.

How would the average worker like their wages to plummet to the point that they could no longer survive on their income. This is the condition facing most American farmers.

Without this strike, many farmers will be forced to liquidate thus eliminating the only job they know how to perform.

In closing, I would like to say, "Don't curse the farmer when your mouth is full."

Student shoplifters keep probation officer busy

Editor,

I found it somewhat irritating to read an article several weeks ago about shoplifting. The article to me accomplished two purposes: Classifying shoplifters as sick people and advising folks not to shoplift at large department stores. I want to impart a slightly different point.

First, shoplifters are not just sickies. They are everyday people like you and me. Either they require something exciting to spice up the day, have acquired a bad habit, are poor and need something desperately or they are just plain ignorant about the consequences of their actions.

Second, students and Ft. Riley soldiers are quite equal in numbers caught for petty theft.

THIS matter concerns all of us in this Christmas season. If there is anything at all you can learn by reading this note, learn this: Please, people, think twice, no, think ten times before you try ripping something off in Manhattan—or anywhere for that matter.

If you think ten times, maybe you'll be so busy thinking that you won't have time, or maybe you'll remember where you left some extra money to pay for that special gift for Mom and Dad.

I am the city probation officer. On the average, I manage to get three new clients per week that I have the dubious opportunity of meeting with for the following twelve months. In the neighborhood of one out of every three people caught for petty theft are students—and I must say, graduate students and professional students are not rare by any means.

Commonly, regardless of whether they take a can of beans, an expensive shirt from Stevenson's or walk out of Sambo's without picking up the tab, you will be sentenced to 15 to 30 days in jail and a $50 fine. So please, people don't shoplift.

IT'S TRUE that most jail sentences are actually not served. That is, immediate probation is generally granted. But don't be surprised to find further repercussions besides meeting with me for twelve months. You may be required to speak to the Dean of your school or even make a visit to the Guidance Center at Lafene.

Now it's not that I want to get out of my job or work less, but I could do with a little less business. And I do want people to know what's in store for them if they don't stop and think twice, no, ten times at least.

Good luck to you all and season greetings.

Begin ready for Middle East peace

WASHINGTON (AP)—Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said on arrival here Thursday he is prepared to discuss with President Carter the "key steps that should be taken" to achieve a comprehensive Middle East peace settlement.

Arriving here after a one-day stay in New York, Begin said Israel "wants to sign peace treaties with all its neighbors—south, north, west and east."

He said recent developments in the Middle East, including the convening of the Cairo conference on Wednesday, represent a "great moment" for the entire region.

Begin, who will meet with President Carter on Friday, expressed hope that other Arab countries will eventually join the Cairo conference.

In saying this, Begin echoed a statement made a few hours earlier by President Carter at a news conference.

CARTER SAID he was hopeful that moderate Arab nations which are boycotting the Cairo meeting eventually will accept any move by Egypt and Israel toward a comprehensive peace.

At a news conference, Carter displayed an understanding attitude toward these nations—Syria, Lebanon and Jordan—but he blasted the Palestinian Liberation Organization as being "completely negative."

"I certainly would not ascribe that sort of intransigence or negative attitude toward any of the other parties who have been mentioned as possible participants," Carter said.

The Cairo conference opened Wednesday with Egypt, Israel, the United States and the United Nations in attendance.

"I would hope that in Cairo itself, even if the other nations don't choose to attend, Egypt and Israel can make a major stride toward a comprehensive peace that would at least address in definitive terms the questions that also would involve Palestinians, Jordanians, Syrians and Lebanese," Carter said.

OF THE Soviet Union, which is co-chairman with the United States of the Geneva conference, Carter said that Moscow has "not been as much of an obstacle" to the peace process in the past.

This appeared to be a retreat from a statement last week by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who questioned why the Soviets actually seek a Middle East peace settlement.

Carter gave a preview of his scheduled meeting Friday with Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

Based on lengthy correspondence with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, Carter said he believes he knows in general terms what would be acceptable to Sadat.

"If Prime Minister Begin's proposal, in my own personal judgment, is conducive to a step in the right direction, then I would certainly privately tell him, 'This is a very good step.'"

"If it should fall far short of what I think President Sadat could accept...I would have no reticence about telling Prime Minister Begin privately."

Reception to honor December grads

December graduates and their families will be honored at a reception from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Sunday in the Union Ballroom, hosted by President and Mrs. Duane Acker.

Light refreshments will be served by the Student Governing Association and comments will be made by Acker; Lt. Gov. Shelby Smith; Jack Reeve, representing the Board of Regents; and Terry Matlack, student body president. The public is invited to attend.

CIA recruiter's visit to K-State cloaked in secrecy

By JIM CARLTON
Staff Writer

At first glance, the recruitment notice appeared as any other tacked onto bulletin boards across campus. The similarity ended there, for the prospective employer was the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

The CIA, represented by Jack Hanson, literally breezed in and out of K-State Dec. 1 in a recruiting effort—its first here since fall 1974. Secrecy and last-minute publicity marked the visit, with less than 24-hours notice given to students that interviews would take place in the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Hanson, CIA personnel officer in Golden, Colo., declined to comment about the interviews, saying only "I'm not at liberty to divulge any information."

BRUCE LAUGHLIN, placement center director, said Hanson called just before he was to arrive and said he was interested in interviewing students in the physics, geography, chemical engineering, nuclear engineering, electrical engineering, computer science, chemistry, agricultural economics and modern languages departments.

Laughlin, said he didn't know from which departments students were interviewed, nor what job or jobs the CIA was trying to fill.

Dale Peterson, CIA public relations officer, said in a telephone interview that the agency recruits heavily from campuses, hiring anyone from political scientists to electrical engineers.

"The agency is an analytical organization and we need both specialists and generalists...it covers the full spectrum," Peterson said.

Some department heads expressed amazement that the placement center didn't have more information about the interviews.

LAUGHLIN said more would have been known if he had not been out of town that day. He added, though, secrecy is a "standard procedure for that kind of an agency."

"They've been subjected to so many complaints, they've become a little paranoid," Laughlin said.

He said the possibility of a news story about the visit could have prompted Hanson to remain as secretive as possible.

The agency makes annual visits to K-State for other than recruiting reasons, according to a nuclear engineering professor, who asked not to be identified.

"They flit in and out," the professor said. "They say they're interested in our opinions about something."

He said the CIA was here last spring and added that the University is conducting no security work of possible interest to the agency.

Roy, Meyers will seek Pearson's U.S. Senate seat

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The race for the U.S. Senate in Kansas began in earnest Thursday as two candidates, one from each party, made it official they would seek the post.

Dr. Bill Roy, a former congressman and Topeka obstetrician, announced during a series of three news conferences across Kansas that he would run for the seat being vacated by Kansas Sen. James Pearson.

Meanwhile, state Sen. Jan Meyers, (R-Overland Park), threw her hat into the political ring at a chamber of commerce luncheon at Merriam.

They became the first to officially launch their campaigns for the Senate seat. At least a dozen other persons around the state have indicated an interest in the race.

ROY, who served from 1970 to 1974 in the House of Representatives, said the three year respite from politics has given him a better perspective of what government can and cannot do.

"I have had the opportunity to observe the results of the handiwork of Congress and Congresses since," he said.

"And I can tell you there is a great gap between the well-meaning legislation that was passed and the rules, regulations and just plain foolishness that are finally imposed on us in our homes and places of business. The great ideas don't always apply."

Roy returned to Topeka following an unsuccessful bid in 1974 to unseat Kansas Sen. Bob Dole. He dismissed criticism that he was unable to beat Dole at a time when the scandal of Watergate hung heavily on the Republican Party, saying he feels he has substantial support this time around and would have the full 10 months in the state for hard campaigning.

He admitted that fund-raising would be a problem. "It always is," he said, but added his campaign probably would cost less than the freewheeling, bitterly fought affair three years ago.

Roy, 51, announced his intention to run at news conferences in Topeka, Kansas City and Wichita.

SEN. MEYERS, an Overland Park housewife with five years experience in the state Senate, told a group of supporters in Merriam that she had been a "moderate and sensitive and responsible" leader at the local and state government levels.

She rejected the suggestion that she might get a substantial number of votes in a crowded Republican field because she is a woman.

"I don't know that people vote so much any more because of sex," she said. "I think they vote for people who they feel are capable, responsible and who will represent them well."

She said she intended to campaign until the 1978 Legislative session gets underway Jan. 9.

"During the session I'll put it completely aside," she said. "The Legislature is so consuming that there's no way you could do campaigning at the same time."

DESCRIBING herself as a moderate, Sen. Meyers said her principal interest in the Legislature has been on behalf of children.

"That's been my principal focus," she said. "But I don't think that necessarily makes you a liberal. I've worked for services for children, mental health services, retarded children, special education, child abuse and neglect."

Congress ready to adjourn, passes payroll tax hike bill

WASHINGTON AP)—With the final vote on refinancing of Social Security nearing, Congress was ready Thursday to adjourn until the new session begins Jan. 19.

The Senate passed, 56 to 21, the bill raising payroll taxes by $227 billion over the next decade to ward off depletion of Social Security reserves. The House promptly took up the measure.

THE DEPARTING congressmen left behind a disappointing Christmas present for President Carter and the Democratic leaders. The top priority energy package was still stuck in a Senate-House conference committee that had not been able to resolve the issue of natural gas pricing.

Leaders said, however, they expect agreement in time for the bill to be passed early in the next session.

The Social Security bill is designed to assure the retirement system's solvency for the next 30 years but it carries a big price tag in the form of steeply hiked payroll taxes.

THE TAX increases will hit highly-paid employees and their employers hardest, more than tripling by 1987 the maximum tax any individual will pay. For the worker considered average by the government, making $10,000 this year and $18,600 by 1987 as inflation continues, the tax take will increase from $585 this year to $1,331 by 1987.

Carter hailed the bill as one that would restore integrity to the system, but acknowledged it cost somewhat more than he had proposed. He had advocated using some funds from the general treasury to hold down the payroll tax increase but Congress rejected the idea.

"Almost all the major proposals that we put forward have been adopted," Carter said at a nationally broadcast news conference.

HE SAID the tax proposals he will submit next year will include income tax cuts to substantially offset the steeper payroll levies.

House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill said the session was the most productive since the one following the death of President John Kennedy, when Lyndon Johnson took over and a wide ranging Democratic domestic program was rammed through.

Republican estimates of the session were in sharp contrast.

Advisers recommend getting credit early, using it wisely

By KARLA ENGEL
Collegian Reporter

Establishing credit as early as possible is the best advice for college students and all young adults, according to Deb Haifleigh, K-State Consumer Relations Board (CRB) director.

Today people can buy almost anything on credit. Families fly now and pay later, eat on credit, go to college, and charge everything from flowers to gasoline.

Establishing a credit rating as early as possible is advised to insure creditors that a person will be a good credit risk when attempting to get a loan or credit of some type.

According to the K-State Extension Service, credit used effectively can lead to a higher standard of living; used unwisely, it can lead to misery.

When young families are establishing homes and rearing children, many feel an income pinch and credit can be a great help.

HAIFLEIGH suggested students use hometown bank accounts as credit references.

"If students budget their money well, their checking and savings accounts will serve as a good reference in obtaining credit," she said.

"Students can sometimes obtain Visa and Master Charge convenience credit cards through their hometown banks," she said.

"It's good to have one of these two cards because you can pay off the bill before any credit is charged."

Students with no income often have problems insuring a creditor of the ability to pay.

"It's a good idea for students to apply for credit with their parents as co-signers at their hometown banks," said Jack Ayres, First National Bank loan director.

"A person whose parents co-sign will get the benefit of the credit, plus the bank has security built on the strength of the parent," Ayres said.

GOOD CREDIT histories record how a person has paid bills in the past and is often necessary to obtain credit.

When a person asks to use credit or borrow money, the credit manager of a store or an officer of a lending agency wants to be sure they will repay the loan.

The extension service identified three factors that determine a person's credit worthiness—character, capital and capacity to pay determined by earning power.

"The three Cs are important in determining credit," Haifleigh said. "What kind of employment and how long a person's been employed there can have a big influence on whether a person gets credit or not. Other credit references are also important."

"Length of employment can sometimes be a restraint when attempting to attain credit," she said. "Many creditors look at whether or not a person has held his job for at least one year. For students, this can be a big problem."

ONCE CREDIT is obtained, it's important to keep up in the payments.

"It's all in how you use the cards," Haifleigh said. "Credit will stretch an income, but if you don't pay back in the allotted amount of time, you can hurt your credit rating," she said.

Haifleigh said credit is an essential tool in paying off home mortgages and car payments, but warned that in the long run credit costs more because of interest.

"If a credit payment is missed in an installment plan, such as a car payment, the creditor can demand payment of the loan in full," Haifleigh said.

"In other missed credit situations, the creditors don't demand full payment but will get more money because with a missed payment there is more money to draw interest on," she added.

If a payment is missed, it will cost more because a person's credit rating will be hurt.

Finals...

It's that time again, and as the last Collegian goes to bed students are readying for a week of finals prior to Christmas break.

Coaches, friends have fond memories of crash victims

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP)—Mike Duff and Kevin Kingston were reliable babysitters. Mark Siegel was considered a pro basketball prospect. Steve Miller had married a cheerleader for his high school team last August.

They were drawn together by a love for basketball. With 10 teammates, they were to play for the Evansville University Aces against a Tennessee school Wednesday night.

But the plane that was to fly them to the game crashed into the side of a muddy hill shortly after taking off Tuesday night. All 29 persons aboard the chartered DC-3 were killed. The team members, the coach, a broadcaster, managers, fans and the crew of three died.

THE INVESTIGATION into the cause of the crash continues. Officials of the National Transportation Safety Board used a railroad crane to remove the engines of the ill-fated DC-3 from the crash site. They were to be sent to Piedmont Aviation's shop in Winston-Salem, N.C., for tests.

"I guess the main quality about each one of them was they just cared about other people," said Bob Brown, Duff and Kingston's high school coach at Eldorado, Ill. "If you put everything on the line and you're fighting for your life, you want Mike Duff and Kevin Kingston right on your side."

"I was real close to Kevin and Mike," said Ernie Simpson, an Evansville assistant coach who missed the ill-fated trip as he went on a recruiting mission to Kentucky.

"There aren't too many 21-year-old men who would do this, and they wouldn't even take money. All I gave them was pizza."

SIMPSON went to Eldorado the day after the crash to meet the families of the two former high school stars.

"The entire community was in shock there," said Simpson. "You could tell these were not boys who had just played basketball there."

Car-driving students, faculty say it with bumper stickers

By MARY HOLLE
Collegian Reporter

Bumper stickers, a way to express one's opinion through "graffiti" on a car's bumper, is thriving at K-State.

The Waters Hall and Call Hall parking lots have predominately agriculture bumper stickers including, "Only love beats milk," "Happiness is owning a horse," "Beef eaters make better lovers!" and "Without farmers, where would you be?"

"We support Agricultural Strike" was the most predominate bumper sticker in Weber, Call and West Stadium lots.

WATERS HALL faculty stickers showed vacation oriented professors travel to Worlds of Fun and other fun spots. But the cars also showed a backing of their agricultural profession and the 'Cats.

The Union parking lot is a melting pot of the bumper-sticker world. The humorous stickers included, "Pass with care—driver chews tobacco," and "Martin Guitars—Finger Picking Good." Most graffiti boasted an athletic team of some kind. Rodeo and agriculture strike stickers mingled with, "Parents without partners," "Prevent Forest Fires," and "55 mph—we can live with it."

SOME FACULTY car bumpers at the Union promoted political candidates as did most faculty stickers at the Ackert parking lot. Most were democratic candidates stickers.

"Drink milk—have energy to burn," "Laser," "Concrete, the foundation of America," "Support fire fighters, the life they save may be yours," indicated conservative faculty despite the "Beep, Beep, your ass," and "Rodeo—America's No. 1 sport," stickers that gleamed in the sun. Ackert student bumper stickers suggested students listen to the radio, and like Martha Keys, Herefords, Hawaii, K-State Wildcats, tallgrass, and doing it with an architect. "I may be slow, but I'm ahead of you," taunted a sticker while another claimed, "I lost it!"

BUMPER STICKERS in Weber, Waters and Call parking lots add western humor to pick-up and car bumpers, suggesting a tobacco-chewing, 10-gallon-hat-wearing, and horse-riding population.

"Cowgirls—try 'em, you'll like 'em," "I'm a lover, a fighter, a wild bull rider," "Horsin' around," "Cowgirl Power," "Cowboys do it best!," "Skool—a pinch is all it takes," "I love Rodeo," "Long live red necks," and "This here's cowboy country!" all tell the country and western segment of the K-State bumper sticker story.

Bumper stickers were lacking at the McCain parking lot, but were in excess at the West Stadium lot.

"Got your ears on?," for citizen band radio lovers and "Physical fitness is the best health insurance," combined with radio and vacation spot stickers in the faculty lot, while student stickers wanted to "Bring back the purple" and "Stick KSKU (radio station) in your ears."

The King Hall faculty lot bumper stickers plugged chemistry with "Chemists have solutions" and "Honk if you passed P-Chem."

A sticker praising God and stickers demanding clean water were also included among the graffiti.

Unusual stickers include "Mule Day," "It's exciting to be Polish," "Bald is beautiful," "Support your local headshop," and "Take your boy hunting instead of hunting your boy."

Two Lawrence men killed in possible gas explosion

LAWRENCE (AP)—Two young men were killed in a pre-dawn explosion that tore through a three-story building in the Lawrence business district Thursday.

The two men were in their 20s and believed to be occupants of apartments in the destroyed building. Their identities were not released.

Three other persons suffered minor injuries in the blaze, and authorities continued sifting through the debris of the building through the day. Two others who had been unaccounted for were located later in the morning, and no one else was believed to be missing.

Authorities estimated damage to the building, which contained a Pier 1 import store and four apartments, and three other nearby shops, at $150,000. The loss of contents was estimated at $100,000.

The explosion, which was heard three miles away, may have been caused by an accumulation of gas, officials said. Damage was so extensive that there was no way to make an immediate determination of the cause of the explosion, they said.

Fire Chief John Kasberger said it appeared to have been a gas explosion and that firefighters noticed gas escaping through cracks in the alley pavement when they arrived to fight the blaze.

Firefighters said three false alarms were turned in shortly after the explosion. Officials said the false alarms may have been attempts to misdirect firemen and were being investigated.

Clair Jennings, an employee of a doughnut shop in an adjacent building and one of those injured in the blast, said she was thrown from the rear of the building by the force of the blast. She said she smelled gas shortly before the explosion.

Windows were blown out of several buildings within a one-block radius of the destroyed building.

After dining about the town 'Romp' finishes at Union

This article brings to a close the first semester of Restaurant Romp. I have tackled as many different entree's as possible including chalupas, kebobs, chicken, roast beef and the infamous prime rib.

There is one lesson to be learned from this table trekking. Manhattan restaurants lack a consistency in one or more of the four essentials (quality, atmosphere, price and service.)

Every place I traveled there was something missing—not to say the food wasn't good. In most cases the quality was superb while the service was adequate and the atmosphere stunk, or vice versa.

ONE OF THESE days I will experience the perfect meal and instantly will be transformed to a regular customer...one of these days. Unfortunately not today, for Restaurant Romp roamed the Union Stateroom.

The Stateroom is a place familiar to all students. There are days when the stomach says go but the wallet says no, so it's fun just to walk around and look, but not touch. We (the Collegian's fall editor and I) decided to splurge and investigate the hot food line and accurately report the facts.

Our meal began with the salad. The Union offers a tossed salad for 40 cents. Not much can be said about the salad except it was crisp. We also sampled the jello salad with peach slices and found the flavor far superior to the tossed salad.

THE MAIN courses that we sampled were the hot roast beef sandwich and the chop suey. The roast beef was served between two slices of white bread with a portion of mashed potatoes and topped with gravy. Unfortunately the temperature of the gravy was comparable to a snowball.

The chop suey consisted of noodles, beansprouts, some celery and stew meat. I can't understand why stew meat was used, it wasn't bad tasting meat but it wasn't exactly authentic. Again the temperature of the chop suey could be compared to a frozen beer.

We sampled the stewed tomatoes which were quite good and also tried the peas and carrots

Hurricanes could face sex change to 'himmicanes'

MIAMI (AP)—Don't be surprised if the 1979 hurricanes have names like Tom, Pierre, Thor and Mario along with the female names like Christine and Lorraine that have long been a bane to the women's liberation movement.

"It's possible," Neil Frank, head of the National Hurricane Center, said Thursday. "There has been some pressure to get away from just female names."

But Frank said that for the first time it isn't the sole prerogative of U.S. meteorologists to decide what to call hurricanes. New names, starting with a 1979 list, will be chosen in May in Puerto Rico at the first meeting of a newly-formed hurricane committee representing 21 Central American, Caribbean and North American nations.

"This group will certainly consider using male and female names," Frank said. "But whatever names they select will have an international flair."

which were soggy, cold and devoid of taste.

For dessert we sampled the pies—coconut and cherry meringue pies to be exact. Not enough can be said about the bakery department. The crusts were flakey, the fillings were rich but not too sweet and the meringue firm and moist. The desserts were the highlight of the meal.

IT IS HARD to rate a food service that serves more meals in one day than the average restaurant dishes out in a week. But for starters, the price can't be beat. Nowhere can one purchase so much food for $4.70. Nowhere.

The variety of foods offered is another plus, and the atmosphere (depending on where one sits) is quite tolerable.

But there is no excuse for the "hot" food to be cold—especially at 12:30 p.m. This problem stems from faulty equipment, poor management or inept employees. The low price is no substitute for cold food.

Next semester we will tackle some of the higher-priced eateries in town (budget permitting), and once again search for the perfect dinner.

STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

ATTENTION STUDENTS: NEW FINANCIAL AID APPLICATIONS FOR 1978-79

Applications for next year's financial aid (you have to reapply every year) are now available at Student Financial Assistance, 104, Fairchild Hall. There are two forms, a KSU Financial Aid Application and a Family Financial Statement (FFS) from the ACT Company.

You should pick up the forms now and take them home with you at semester break. You can fill out the KSU form yourself, but the FFS requires information from your parents' 1977 income tax return. It should be completed and mailed to ACT as soon after Jan. 1 as possible, because the priority date for consideration is Feb. 15, 1978. Students whose applications and need analysis report are received after this date will be considered only after those who have met the priority date.

NEW THIS YEAR! The ACT Family Financial Statement can be used to establish eligibility for the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG), so you won't have to fill out an extra form for BEOG any more. ACT will send the Eligibility Report to you at the address you list on your FFS.

If you do not have justified need as calculated by the ACT Company but do require funds for educational expenses, you should consider applying for a Guaranteed Student Loan through the Higher Education Assistance Foundation of Kansas. This Foundation has established the Higher Education Loan Program of Kansas, which provides a "Lender of Last Resort" for students who are unable to find commercial lenders to handle their loans.

IF YOU HAVE ANY QUESTIONS ABOUT THE USE OF THE FORMS, STUDENTS BUDGETS, RECEIPT OF FUNDS, ETC., PLEASE CONTACT ONE OF THE FINANCIAL AID OFFICERS IN 104 FAIRCHILD HALL.

The pill: Women, doctors gamble with percentages

By K. ALAN MONTGOMERY
Collegian Reporter

A K-State coed was informed Monday by her gynecologist that she was four weeks pregnant—even though she had been taking birth control pills for months.

Her gynecologist told her the pills didn't prevent the pregnancy because "the dosage of estrogen in the pills may not have been correct for her particular case."

She is now contemplating abortion, a costly procedure both financially and psychologically.

It's not easy to prescribe birth control pills.

"There is nothing close to being a practical test, economically, to prescribe the birth control pill," said Robert Brown of Lafene Student Health Center.

THERE IS a blood testing procedure to determine the natural level of estrogen in the bloodstream, which is a key in determining how potent of a pill to prescribe, Brown said.

The trouble with that test is it is expensive ($60 to $100 per test), would have to be performed several times during a month as the women's natural estrogen level changes and still would not be a sure indication on which to base a prescription, he said.

"We do have rules of thumb to go by which we have confidence in," he said.

The number of days of ovulation per period is one of the variables considered when determining the amount of estrogen to prescribe to a patient, he said.

THE ESTROGEN levels of the birth control pills of the 1960s ranged from a high of 150 micrograms of estrogen per pill (in the Enovid series of 1961), to smaller dosages as the possibility of side effects became an issue, according to Ivri Messinger, K-State director of pregnancy counseling.

By 1970 the estrogen levels were down to about 50 micrograms per pill (in the Demulen series), and today doctors are prescribing pills, such as Norinyl 1 plus 50 and Modicon which have estrogen levels of 50 micrograms per pill and 35 micrograms per pill respectively, Messinger said.

Pills that contain 35 micrograms of estrogen vary slightly in effectiveness, ranging from 98 percent to more than 99 percent effective, she said.

AT 99 PERCENT effectiveness, in a group of 1,000 women, theoretically 10 of them would be pregnant within one year, she said.

It's not unusual for women to get pregnant while taking the pill anymore, since the lower dosage pills came out," said Karen Martin, a Manhattan pharmacist.

"With the low dosage pills, you have to keep the level of estrogen up in your blood or you can ovulate," Martin said. "This requires taking them every day without fail."

If the women does forget to take the pill, she should take two the next day, she said.

IT'S POSSIBLE to ovulate within 72 hours of discontinuing the pill, making it possible to become pregnant, she said.

"Around here (Manhattan) it's so easy to get an abortion that it's almost easier to not take the pill and just get an abortion," she said.

Depending upon the women and the particular side effect, it is 4 to 19 times safer to be on the pill than to be pregnant, Brown said.

"The problem here on K-State campus is that there are too many people who are sexually active but sexually ignorant," Messinger said.

Blind girl learns to read new kind of 'picture book'

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP)—A little girl reads a picture book—nothing unusual except that the child is blind and she is "seeing" the pictures with her searching fingers. Specialists say the book, developed by a woman from Iowa, adds a new dimension to the life of blind children.

Reading aloud a simple text she has learned by heart, the delighted child feels how Little Rough sets out along straight and crooked paths to find Little Shaggy, a playmate who likes nothing better than to hide.

The book is described as the first of its kind in the world, a mass-produced picture book for blind pre-schoolers with a simple but entertaining story told in abstract illustrations in relief, or raised imprint, on cardboard pages.

The 24-page, spiral-bound book is the brainchild of Virginia Jensen, 50, a native of Des Moines, Iowa, who taught school in Detroit Lakes, Minn., before moving in 1951 to Copenhagen, where she is an established writer and publisher of children's literature.

She worked for three years on the picture book with co-author Dorcas Haller, 31, a native of Concord, N.H., who is studying library science here.

Two farmers find cooperation helps them through the strike

ABILENE (AP)—Two central Kansas farmers have found cooperation a necessary ingredient of the farm strike they both support. Steve Johnson, who operates a farm near Enterprise, and Lewis Beemer of the Abilene area worked out a swap of milk-for-hay the first day of the strike.

"We set it up as a pound-for-pound trade," Beemer said. "I knew that I was in the market for hay and I heard that Steve needed some milk for his hogs."

"By trading like this, we can help another farmer out," he said.

Beemer is a dairy farmer who says he wants to support the strike but doesn't want to pour his milk down the drain.

"I am a farmer and I'll be keeping my milk off the market during the strike. I don't want to throw the milk away, and this milk-for-hay trade with another farmer is a good idea because it helps us both," Beemer said.

Johnson, who has 95 hogs, said the milk will enable him to carry on with his farming operation. "I'll feed this milk to my hogs," he said. "I'm a young farmer and I need all the help I can get to stay in farming, and this trade will help me out."

Dwight closes book on '77, looks to volleyball next year

By BARNEY PARKER
Collegian Reporter

Fresh from a trip to the AIAW national tournament, Coach Mary Phyl Dwight has reason to be excited about the future of K-State women's volleyball.

"I'm excited about the development of volleyball here," Dwight said. "I just hope it's not stifled."

From a team with a 40-17 record, Dwight will lose no one to graduation. Which means the prospects for next year's team are great, but it also means Dwight's hands are tied as far as scholarship money is concerned.

"I'm at the mercy of the athletic council," Dwight said. With all six of her scholarships committed, Dwight has no more scholarship money. "If I don't get any scholarships next year, we're not going anywhere," she said.

"In six years K-State has gone from nothing to someone who could be a national power," she said.

K-STATE'S success began this year with a win over Kansas University which had been the dominant team in the state. That win earned them a trip to the regional tournament where they upset Southwest Missouri State and finished second.

"That gave us respectability," Dwight said of the win over Southwest Missouri, the defending regional champion.

pointment of the year was a fourth-place finish in the Big Eight tournament.

"That was the low of the season," she said. "We played a lot of games in one stretch. We basically got tired. That was my fault," Dwight said, because she set up this year's schedule.

'Cats go down in first-round

The K-State women's basketball team lost to Tennessee Tech, 73-59, Thursday in the opening round of the Mississippi University for Women Christmas Invitational tournament in Columbia, Miss.

Tech, led by the scoring of 6-5 Trish Bell, who scored 23 points, hit for 52 per cent of its shots from the floor and 70 per cent from the free throw line to hand the Wildcats their fourth loss of the season against five wins.

Laurie Miller led the K-State scoring barrage with 20 points, including 4-for-4 from the free-throw line. Miller was also the Wildcats' leading rebounder with six. Kristi Short added 12 points in the losing cause.

Tech was aided in the win when K-State, trailing 35-31 at the half, was able to score only one point in the regional tourney, the 'Cats accepted an invitation to the national tournament, which was both good and bad, Dwight said.

Her young team gained experience, but she said: "I'm not sure the administration was so happy to see us go because of monetary factors, which was disappointing."

Dwight is not certain whether winning this year will gain her team any more support next year. "I would hope so," she said, but because volleyball is a level II sport and "on the bottom rung for everything" the support may not be there in '78.

the first eight minutes of the second half. During that same time, Tech scored 12 points to take a 15-point lead.

K-State was scheduled to play Mississippi last night in the second game in the double-elimination tournament.

Sixteen of the nation's top ranked teams are competing in the three-day tournament that will end Saturday.

Laughter, bulls follow rodeo clowns

By KIM MEYER

Star of Bethlehem probably thermonuclear explosion

LONDON (AP)—The biblical star of Bethlehem was probably a giant thermonuclear space explosion that could recur any time, three astronomers report in an article published here.

The star seen was typical of a nova, a so-called new star that is in fact a runaway thermonuclear explosion on the surface of a "white dwarf" star in a two-star system, the article said.

The two Britons and a New Zealander say they reached their conclusion after studying records of ancient Chinese and Korean astronomers who are believed to have seen the phenomenon.

THE ARTICLE, published in the prestigious journal of the Royal Astronomical Society, was written by John Parkinson of the Mullard Space Science
Laboratory at Dorking, Richard Stephenson of the Institute of Lunar and Planetary Sciences at Newcastle University and David Clark, the New Zealander of the Royal Greenwich Observatory.

The star of Bethlehem, as described in the Gospel according to St. Matthew, was a light shining "in the east" which led the Wise
Men to the birthplace of the infant Jesus.

In the past, scientists have thought the appearance of the star may have been caused by the conjunction of the planets Jupiter, Saturn and Mars, or by a comet or meteor that lit up the sky.

BUT THE journal article says the ancient Chinese Astronomical Treatise of the History of the Former Han Dynasty recorded the 70-day appearance of a bright star at the right time and in the right place to have been the star of Bethlehem.

"It is likely to have been caused by a small, super-dense dying star in orbit around a star that is probably still shining," Parkinson said. "The dense small star, with its enormous gravitational field caused by its density of several tons per cubic inch, would be pulling hydrogen gas off the larger star."

"The hydrogen would steadily accumulate around the dense star until, at a certain critical moment, it would detonate in a thermonuclear explosion. Then the whole process of accumulating hydrogen would start all over again until the next nuclear explosion, perhaps several thousand years later."

PARKINSON SAID the prospect of another explosion could mean the star of Bethlehem might appear again at some later date.
But, the scientist added, it was unlikely anyone would recognize it as such.

The article said more confirmation of their theory was

"When I was a leetle bitty boy, I went to the rodeo and for some reason, I watched the clowns a lot," said George "The Clown" Doak, who's been a clown for 24 years. "That's when I decided to be a rodeo clown."

LIKE MANY others, the 41-year-old Texan is a cowboy-turned-clown. He was offered free entry in bull riding and bareback broncs in exchange for clowning.

"They needed a clown, so I took it (the job)," Doak, an accredited chemical engineer, said. "It was what I wanted to do all along anyway."

Doak, who has been "clowning ever since," was fighting bulls this year at the National Finals Rodeo (NFR), the rodeo
"Superbowl."

"To be a good clown, you've got to think you're funny and you've got to make the crowd think you're funny," Marvin "Quail"
Dobbs, a clown for 21 years, said.

A CLOWN HAS to enjoy children and enjoy life, the 35-year old barrel clown said.

"We're people, too," Dobbs said. "Sometimes we get tired of making people laugh and signing autographs, but if you like what you're doing then those times aren't very often."

Bull-fighting clowns also have to be athletes, Dobbs said.

Bull fighters dart around the bull while the cowboy gets clear.
Barrel clowns tease the bull from a barrel which is often rolled at the bull's feet. Clowns have saved many cowboys' lives by distracting bulls, Sandy Kirby, professional bull rider, said.

"Once a bull rolled over on top of me. The clowns jumped in three or four times trying to get me loose," Kirby said. "If they hadn't been there, I might have gotten hurt a lot worse."

SUCH ANTICS take a "gritty" and athletic person, Frank Rhodes, 1977 NFR barrel clown, said. Rhodes received 60 stitches in his head when a bull joined him in the barrel, but said he isn't afraid of being hurt.

"You get used to it," the former professional bareback rider said.

"You try to think it'll never happen to you."

"It's a sport, just like any other professional sport," Doak said.
And, like other sports, clowns train to reduce the chance of injury.

Miles Hare, another 1977 NFR bull fighter, snow skis, plays tennis and runs to keep in shape.

"To me, it just helps to be a little athletic, unless you want to get run over a lot," the 22-year old clown said.

Clowns prepare physically and mentally before entering the arena, but once in front of the chutes, "it's a livin'."

the union bookstore saved you a quarter million dollars in book expenses this year!

That's right! The Union Bookstore's used book program saved K-State students better than $250,000.00 this year. That's more than $13.60 a student! How did we do it? By using common sense. Instead of sending big checks off to the publishers for our textbook stock, we prefer to put it in your hands in cash when we buy your books. It makes sense, the savings add up fast, and what's more, we've been doing it for you for years. As a result, the average student's book expenses are reduced by about one-fifth.

Here are the details: First, we pay 20% more for your books than is currently available at other dealers. Second, these exceptionally high prices attract a lot of books—literally tons of them, so our stocks are the largest in Manhattan, bar none! (One out of every three course books sold at the Union this year was a used book.)
With such a high volume of used copies available, and since you save twice on used books (once when you buy it, and again when you sell it) it is easy to see why the net result is such a huge savings. It's a fact that the Union puts more cash in the hands of K-State students than anybody else in the book business. You couldn't save more if you bought all new books at wholesale!

So why are we buying this ad? Not just to blow our own horn. We figure that if you know the facts, you can save yourself a lot of money.
So we bought this ad to convince you that there are only two simple steps to save money on your textbooks:

1. Sell your books at the Union—you save because we pay more.
2. Buy your books at the Union—you save because we have more used books.

So, gather up all those books lying around the apartment or dorm room, and sell them at the Union (in front of Forum Hall) during Final Week. Then, come see us again next January during registration. Remember, we save you more, and we can prove it.

Busnappers face life sentences for injuring captives

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP)—The three young men who admitted kidnapping 26 Chowchilla school children and their bus driver were convicted Thursday of physically injuring three of their captives, a ruling that carries an automatic sentence of life in prison without parole.

Superior Court Judge Leo Deegan, who heard the case without a jury, announced his decision as soon as defense attorneys completed their closing arguments for James Schoenfeld, 26; his brother, Richard, 23; and Fred Woods, 26.

Deegan declared that the fainting spells and stomach disorders testified to by Jodi Heffington, Jennifer Brown and Rebecca Reynolds constituted bodily harm under California law.

HE ACQUITTED the defendants on the same charge involving two other captives.

The defendants had pleaded guilty earlier this year to 27 counts of simple kidnapping but said they were innocent of the more serious charges of kidnapping with bodily harm.

Defense attorneys won the right to go back into court on Jan. 16 to contest the sentence by claiming mitigating circumstances.

Deegan described the July 15, 1976, abduction as "an ordeal of terror," the exact words used in the prosecution's description of the bizarre crime.

The three girls had testified they were stuffed with their schoolmates into two small vans when their bus was commandeered at gunpoint on the hot summer day near their central California hometown.

Deegan assailed the defendants for driving their hostages around for 11 hours and failing to make any attempt to alleviate what he called "terrible" conditions.

HE SAID the children were not provided with water, a chance to get some fresh air or the opportunity to use a toilet during the meandering drive that ended at a quarry 100 miles north.

The children were placed in a buried moving van where, said Deegan, the conditions were equally as bad, and were confined for 16½ hours before escaping.

Although the judge noted there was some water and food in the buried van, "that is not to say they the kidnappers came anywhere near preventing the suffering of these children."

The defendants took the ruling impassively but the elder Schoenfeld's attorney, Lester Gendron, said his client was surprised.

"I told him he would get a favorable ruling," said Gendron. "This was an erroneous decision and it certainly will be appealed."

The prosecution's key contention had been that the children suffered heat exhaustion, but the white-haired judge, who was called out of retirement to hear the case, rejected that.

"I was not satisfied that heat exhaustion was established by the weight of the evidence," Deegan said. "I am satisfied, however, from the testimony of some of the children that they fainted and had stomach distress."

He said the fact that three of the victims suffered ailments directly linked to the kidnapping constituted suffering and, under the law, suffering was bodily injury.

"Kidnapping itself is classically understood as being in violation of the bodily security of the person kidnapped," he declared. "Bodily harm is interference of bodily security."

Book Buy-Back

Here are some answers to often asked questions.

Question: How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

Answer:

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester, and if the Bookstore does not already have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60 per cent of the publisher's current list price.

For example: if a book sells for $10.00 new and it meets the requirements noted above, the book would be bought from you for $6.00.

If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be used again, or if it already has a sufficient stock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook, the buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price paid.

Question: Is 60 per cent the usual price paid for textbooks around the country?

Answer:

Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50 per cent for books being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60 per cent. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade.

Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60 per cent policy apply to them too?

Answer:

Yes. The Union Bookstore does not penalize you on paperbacks. If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them, you will receive 60 per cent of the publisher's list price.

Question: If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Answer:

Yes. For instance, if you bought your book for $9.00 and the publisher's list price is now $10.00, you will get $6.00, not $5.40.

We will buy books:

Kidnappers want amnesty in exchange for youth's life

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP)—Kidnappers believed to be Greek Cypriot extremists held President Spyros Kyprianou's 19-year-old son Thursday, reportedly threatening to behead him unless his father grants amnesty to political offenders.

"If our demands are not met by tonight, we will send you the head of your son," a newspaper said the kidnappers warned Kyprianou in a message.

UNOFFICIAL SOURCES said the abductors of Achilleas Kyprianou, a second lieutenant in the Greek Cypriot National Guard, had set a deadline of between 4 p.m. and 5 p.m. CST.

A military source said eight officers attached to the guard, which is the Greek Cypriot army, had been taken into custody for questioning. The source said the officers were Greek Cypriots and military advisers from mainland Greece.

Informed sources said young Kyprianou was seized Wednesday night at a mountain military camp 30 miles southwest of Nicosia, capital of this war-divided Mediterranean nation.

A government report said only that he had been kidnapped by "unknown persons," but there was immediate speculation here that the abductors were members of EOKA-B, an underground movement that seeks "enosis"—the union of Cyprus with Greece. National Guard officers and right-wingers from Greece have been connected with EOKA-B in the past.

THE KIDNAPPERS sent a tape cassette in which the young man beseeched his father to meet the kidnappers' demands, informed sources said.

But a presidential aide was overheard saying in a telephone conversation that yielding to the kidnappers would mean the end of Kyprianou's three-month-old government.

Achilleas Kyprianou, described by a former teacher as a model student and athlete who seemed mature for his age, is the elder of Kyprianou's two sons.

Sources said word of the kidnapping was kept from the 45-year-old president for eight hours out of consideration for his health. Kyprianou, who became president on the death of Archbishop Makarios last August, is believed suffering from a heart ailment.

THE PRESIDENT summoned his cabinet and the leaders of all four Greek Cypriot political parties for an emergency meeting. The cabinet issued a statement urging the population to "remain cool" and calling on the kidnappers to "think of the gravity of their action and the critical moments Cyprus is going through" and release the youth.

Committee lay-off proposal draws faculty fire at forum

By JANET HELM
Collegian Reporter

Faculty members Thursday criticized a University committee's tentative proposal on steps K-State should take if a projected enrollment decline erodes the University's financial base enough to force it to pay off tenured faculty.

"What I think is lacking in the document is any suggestion that the administrators would suffer from any risk at all," said Charles Reagan, associate philosophy professor. "That is, when the crunch comes, we immediately start looking to teaching faculty to get rid of them."

Reagan said the problem was that there are too many administrators on the committee that does the dismissing.

The proposal, drawn up by the Committee on Financial Exigency, suggested setting up a hierarchical system to dismiss tenured faculty and stated "as a general rule, non-tenured faculty and non-tenured administrators should be laid off first."

Franz Samelson, psychology professor, criticized the proposal because it suggested only one solution—lay-offs—was possible.

"People should share the burden of financial exigency and this proposal ignores other alternatives," Samelson said, and suggested early retirement as an option.

Another faculty member said faculty shouldn't confine themselves to after-the-fact proposals.

"We should be looking to protect ourselves," he said. "We need to plan to prevent financial exigency, not only plan procedures after it occurs."

OTHERS were in favor of salary freezes or salary cutbacks within departments or colleges with surpluses.

Myron Calhoun, associate professor of computer science, was in favor of cutting back salaries.

"A smaller income would be much better than none at all," he said.

The proposal had come under criticism because it failed to define "financial exigency," but Vincent Gillespie, a committee member and assistant English professor, told the 35 faculty members present that the committee found it couldn't properly define the term with the information it had.

"There is not a person on the committee who is not aware of that (the lack of definition),"

Gillespie said. "But describing the conditions that would justify financial exigency is a technical and extraordinarily complex task."

"It involves questions that no one on the committee could answer," he said. "But we also recognized, however, that to sit back, since we cannot immediately describe the condition, would be a denial of our responsibility."

"This meeting is not an attempt to defend this document as it presently stands," Gillespie said. "Not a one of us on the committee felt that somehow this was the final word or even the best word."

Without the proposal, faculty "would be left with no defense," he said.

Without a statement of procedures, there would be no organization to the way in which faculty members would be dismissed, he said.

Recreational Services asks for $1 activity fee increase

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
 SGA Editor

K-State Recreational Services will ask for a $1 increase in the activity fee for next fall to cover an increase in the cost of operations, according to Raydon Robel, Recreational Services director.

The increase of the federal minimum wage from $2.30 to $2.65 an hour for student employees is the main factor in the request for the increase, Robel said.

"The biggest item is for the staffing of the entire program," he said. "Inflation on supplies and equipment is a part of it, too."

Robel said Recreational Services hasn't requested a fee increase during the past four years. Recreational Services now receives $2.50 per student from student activity fees.

AN INCREASE of about $1 is needed to keep recreational programs at their current levels, Robel said.

"Overall, you will not see an increase in services. This is pretty well just to meet the current needs that we have, to more or less hold the status quo," he said.

Robel said without the increase there would be possible increases in intramural and rental fees, and cutbacks in other programs.

Robel said he is optimistic about receiving an increase.

"If people want us to continue to do what we are doing now and meet the present needs, then they will say yes," he said.

THE $1 increase must be proposed by Recreational Services Council to Student Senate Finance Committee, and must be approved by Student Senate or the student body in referendum.

Terry Matlack, student body president, said the total dollar needs of the recreation program will have to be explored before a fee increase is considered.

Carter bids farewell to Hubert Humphrey

WASHINGTON (AP)—Hubert Humphrey was eulogized by President Carter on Sunday as "the most beloved of all Americans," and an inspiration to all the presidents of his time.

At a memorial service in the Rotunda of the Capitol, beneath the great dome, Carter spoke in farewell to the Minnesota senator, former vice president and sometime political rival, saying that when Humphrey first visited him in the Oval Office, "I felt that he should have served there."

Former Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford, and Lady Bird Johnson, the wife of the late President Lyndon Johnson, were among the official mourners at the nationally televised service.

"We and our families are here today to testify that Hubert Humphrey may well have blessed our country more than any of us," Carter said.

BEFORE the flag-draped coffin of the fallen Happy Warrior, the leaders of American government gathered in Washington's final tribute. The Senate in which he served, the House, the Cabinet, the Supreme Court, all assembled where Humphrey had lain in state since Saturday, while thousands of citizens filed past the coffin.

Humphrey's body was taken from the Capitol after the service by military pallbearers and driven to Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington. From there, it was flown aboard a presidential jet to Minnesota. It was to lie in state in the Minnesota Capitol Sunday night and Monday morning before funeral services in St. Paul and burial Monday afternoon in Minneapolis.

Vice President Walter Mondale and his wife, both Minnesotans, joined Mrs. Humphrey for the flight home. Carter planned to fly to Minnesota on Monday to attend the funeral.

"He was simply incredible," said the grieving Mondale, recalling his first meeting with Humphrey 31 years ago. "When he said that life was not meant to be endured but rather to be enjoyed, you knew what he meant. You could see it simply by watching and listening to him...."

"He taught us all how to hope and how to love, how to win and how to lose. He taught us how to

State speech sees no quick solutions

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter will deliver personally a no-quick-fix State of the Union address Thursday that, according to presidential aides, will call for a national effort to grapple with economic and other problems that defy easy solutions.

Aides said Carter, in his nationally broadcast appearance before a joint Senate-House session at 9 p.m. EST, will set forth his legislative goals for the new year without attempting to submit a laundry list of administration proposals.

Traditionally, State of the Union addresses serve as the starter's gun for each annual congressional session and mark a formal enunciation of administration goals for the coming year.

INFORMANTS said Carter plans to lay particular stress on his economic priorities for 1978, including a $25 billion tax cut, a new anti-inflation effort and the related problem of completing work on a stalled energy program laden with economic significance.

Although these sources reported that domestic concerns likely will account for more than half of Carter's message, they said he will not neglect his drive for Senate ratification of the Panama Canal treaty or his hopes for peace in the Middle East and a new arms curb agreement with the Soviet Union.

One aide said the president will emphasize a national need to face up to nearly insoluble problems, discussing not only his responsibilities in this regard but also those of the people as a whole.

Humphrey's funeral ends Nixon's self-imposed exile

WASHINGTON (AP)—As a quiet participant in the ceremonies honoring Hubert H. Humphrey, former President Richard M. Nixon ended on Sunday 3½ years of self-imposed exile from the nation's capital.

Nixon hadn't returned to Washington since he resigned the presidency and vacated the White House in August 1974 at the height of the Watergate scandal.

"It seemed a good time for him to come back," said Sen. Mark Hatfield (R-Ore.), not always a supporter of the former president.

Hatfield and dozens of other Republican notables including former President Gerald R. Ford, former Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller and Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker met informally with Nixon following the ceremonies in the Capitol Rotunda.

FOR MANY of them, it was the first time they had seen Nixon since he stepped down. Since then, Nixon has been a virtual recluse at his home in San Clemente, Calif., with the exception of a trip to China and a series of paid interviews with television personality David Frost.

Congressional sources said Nixon, upon learning of Humphrey's death Friday night, asked whether there would be any objection to his attending the ceremony.

Sources said the request was relayed to Humphrey's widow, Muriel, as she accompanied her husband's body from Minnesota to Washington in a presidential airplane.

Asked if she would object to Nixon's presence, Muriel replied, "Absolutely not," according to a person who was present.

live and, finally, he taught us how to die."

AND although Humphrey never realized his greatest goal, the presidency he sought so long, Mondale said that he achieved something more rare and valuable than that office.

"He became his country's conscience," Mondale said.

Carter and Mondale both spoke of Humphrey's early advocacy of civil rights for black Americans, the issue that split the Democratic Party in 1948. Twenty years later, Humphrey led that party, divided again, this time over the war in Vietnam, in a presidential campaign that barely lost. Nixon defeated him, and it was Humphrey's death that led the resigned president to return to Washington for the first time since Watergate and its aftermath forced him from the White House.

Nixon flew to Washington from Los Angeles Saturday on a commercial airliner, and planned to return on Monday. His daughter, Tricia, accompanied him at the service.

Humphrey died Friday night of cancer at his home in Waverly, Minn. His body was flown to Washington on Saturday for final honors at the Capitol.

Senate cautious with Rec funds issue

"Generally speaking, I am going to frown on any student fee increases," Matlack said.

Matlack said the proposal by Sen. Donn Everett to levy a five-cent tax on cigarettes sold in Kansas to raise money for state university recreation programs should be considered before any student fees are increased.

CINDY THOMAS, senate chairman, said she would like to avoid having an increase in the activity fees for full-time students if recreation services doesn't need the money.

"If they need the money to continue to operate at the same level that they have been, we will have to look at their budget to see if the need exists," Thomas said.

Brad Henson, agriculture senator, said an increase in recreation services' allocation is bad timing in light of the controversy over the building of the new recreation complex.

"We'd have to raise the student activity fee before we could give it to them. I can't think of where in the budget we could get $16,000," Henson said.

Martin Luther King honored in annual birthday celebration

ATLANTA (AP)—On what would have been Martin Luther King's 49th birthday, those gathered to honor him were told that "the right to work, to have a decent job is part of the celebration."

Jazz band plans Switzerland trip

The Kansas State University Jazz Band has been invited to perform along with seven collegiate and 20 professional bands at the International Collegiate Jazz Festival July 5-9 in Montreux, Switzerland.

Last year the band placed third in world competition, according to Phil Hewett, band director. No competition has been scheduled this year.

Twenty-six K-State students will be flown to Europe July 4 for two weeks which will include a concert in London, England and two concerts at the Nice Jazz Festival in France.

The band has raised $7,000 of the $12,000 required to cover the costs of the trip to date.

Dr. Benjamin Mays, president emeritus of Morehouse College, urged the nation to fulfill its commitments to human rights and full employment as a testimonial to King, the civil rights leader who was assassinated in 1968.

"Martin Luther King has thrown the torch to us and we are challenged today to keep his dream alive," Mays told 500 people, including King's family, at an interfaith service in Big Bethel A.M.E. Church.

"In no other way can his untimely death be justified."

During the conference held here as part of the 10th annual celebration of King's birthday, other civil rights leaders, congressmen, labor leaders and members of the Carter administration also called for full employment.

New constitution in Ecuador

QUITO, ECUADOR—Ecuadorians voted on a new constitution Sunday in a referendum that could break the almost solid wall of military rule in South America.

With about two-thirds of the vote counted, election officials announced that what has been called the "new" constitution, giving strong guarantees of workers' rights, received 47.9 percent of the vote; a "reformed" 1945 constitution had 31.4 percent.

The military-spawned constitution that had been expected to win the most votes would nearly double the electorate by enfranchising an estimated 1.5 million adult illiterates, and would provide strong guarantees for workers' rights and a president elected for five years. It was known as the "new constitution." "new" constitution.

The alternative disallowed voting by illiterates, emphasized the role of elected legislators in deciding workers' rights and provided for a four-year president.

CBers employ boycott

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—A CB magazine's campaign to help cross-country truckers avoid toll roads and bridges may be to blame for a decrease in the number of heavy trucks traveling turnpikes in Oklahoma and Kansas.

In its Sunday editions, the Kansas City Star reported on the boycott and the recent decreases in truck use of toll roads in both Oklahoma and Kansas.

The protest movement was endorsed about two months ago by the National CB Truckers' News, a monthly tabloid based in Independence, Kan.

Earl Stevens, editor of the publication, said it's possible to shave 410 miles off a run from some East Coast cities to the West Coast by avoiding most turnpikes and that can translate into a fuel savings alone from $42 to $50, plus savings on meals and toll charges.

Teacher gets kids jobs

COLUMBUS, Ohio—Get an A in Charles Tennant's class and he'll buy you a steak dinner. Get an A or a B, and he may get you a job.

For the past four years Tennant, 35, has been working with ninth-grade students who often are classified as "dead-end kids"—chronic hooky players, students with bad grades and bad attitudes.

Of the more than 100 students he has taught in four years, only eight have been fired by employers, Tennant says, and the scholastic improvement of the students has been even better than he thought it would be.

Tennant's work is part of a federally and state-funded work-study program under which students attend school half a day and work the rest of the day.

There are three basic rules in Tennant's class: No skipping school, pay attention and perform on the job.

He has another rule that no student can report for work who has missed school. And all must have savings accounts.

Sex Pistols sour on U. S.

SAN FRANCISCO—Sex Pistols, the punk rockers from Britain who say they like their fans to wear safety pins in their noses, were disappointed during a U.S. tour because American audiences were "too tame," their manager says.

"It's been an eye-opener for the band to realize England is a helluva lot freer and a helluva lot more intelligent than America," Malcolm McLaren said in a telephone interview.

The rebel band ended its seven-city tour Saturday night before 3,500 people in San Francisco's Winterland auditorium.

Asked to describe what would have happened if the show had gone right, McLaren replied simply: "Perhaps you would not have seen the San Francisco Winterland anymore."

Local Forecast

Snow is in the forecast for today with a possible accumulation of 4 or more inches. Highs today will be in the low to mid 20s. Lows tonight will be near zero. Highs Tuesday will be in the teens.

Schedule hassles settled; Mideast peace talks resume

JERUSALEM (AP)—Egypt and Israel resolved a last-minute dispute over agenda Sunday that had threatened to delay the resumption of peace talks, and Egypt's foreign minister later flew in from Cairo for the opening of the crucial negotiations Monday.

The dispute involved the agenda's wording on the Palestinian issue, sources said, and the two sides, communicating through the U.S. embassies, reached an agreement on a new formulation in order to get the talks started.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, who abruptly postponed his departure for Israel Saturday night because of the agenda deadlock, is scheduled to arrive Monday to join the discussions.

EGYPTIAN President Anwar Sadat gave the go-ahead for Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel to attend the talks after a confusing weekend of public and private maneuvering that appeared to threaten a major setback for the peace process.

"I am looking forward to trying to achieve tangible and concrete results . . . we are at a crucial crossroads," Kamel said upon arriving here with an 11-member negotiating team.

He reiterated Egyptian insistence that there can be no peace without self-determination for the Palestinians and total Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands.

Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, whom Kamel will be facing across the negotiating table, welcomed the Egyptians and told them Israel "shall listen very carefully and attentively to what you have to say" and would be "most forthcoming" in the talks.

EGYPT wants to discuss "self-determination" for the 1.1 million Palestinians living under Israeli rule on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip. Sadat has interpreted the phrase as a stepping-stone to an independent Palestinian state, possibly linked with Jordan.

Israel has rejected the idea of establishing a Palestinian state on its eastern flank and is offering limited self-rule for the Palestinians under an Israeli military umbrella. Sadat turned down that plan when he met Begin at Ismailia, Egypt, on Christmas day.

Format changed for readers' benefit

Today marks the advent of another semester at Kansas State University, a semester that shows promise of becoming rewarding and exciting for the estimated 18,000 students.

The beginning of a new semester also marks the first day of publication for the Collegian and changes have been made in the paper designed to make it more readable and enjoyable.

The overall physical appearance will not be altered, but two major changes have been made.

The crossword puzzle, normally found among the classified ads, has been moved to the page directly opposite classifieds. It was moved to allow more space for the ads without having to jump them to another page. It is hoped that this move will provide more continuity and consistency for the readers of the classifieds.

Peanuts has also found a new home. Snoopy and his gang will be found on the classified page. The move was made to allow more space for the letters from readers on the editorial page.

And Peanuts will not be the only comic strip in the paper. Frankly Speaking will be used more on the editorial page and Downtown, a strip about college life, has found a home on the classified page.

In an effort to help our advertisers and readers, the sports page will follow guidelines that will make it easier to find.

In an eight page paper, sports will always be found on page six; in a 12 page paper, pages eight and nine; in a 16 page paper, pages 10 and 11 and in a twenty page paper, pages 16 and 17. So often we have heard complaints from readers about the location of sports and we hope these guidelines will make it more accessible for the reader.

Arts and entertainment, aptly named "The Front Row," will again return and will be found in the Thursday issues of the paper. This will allow readers to make plans for the upcoming weekend without having to wait until Friday morning to do so.

The Weekly Feature, so much an integral part of the Collegian, will once again appear this semester and among the topics we plan to pursue are the feasibility of a new fieldhouse, the future of Nichols Gym, the reorganization of the department of facilities, slumlords in Manhattan and a host of other aspects of this university community.

The Collegian staff hopes the changes and concentrated effort toward professionalism will make the paper enjoyable and informative and we wish everyone a successful and prosperous new semester.

Wheat: Buy it — don't plant it

Simple solutions are sometimes the best, and American farmers are beginning to awaken to a possible simple answer to the wheat price dilemma: buy wheat, don't plant it.

You see, the logic is quite straight-forward: the price of wheat is in the pits, and the price of planting wheat is at an all time high.

Farmers who plant wheat at this high cost will have to sell their grain at dirt-cheap prices, and will, of course, lose money.

Farmers who plant wheat will also contribute to the over-supply problem that exists, insuring low wheat prices for the future.

Planting wheat is not the answer.

Buying wheat is a very encouraging action to consider.

If a farmer would take the large amount of capital that he has (or has borrowed), and instead of sinking it in a crop that is doomed from the start to be a losing proposition, simply buy all the wheat that he can at the present prices, he would probably make some money by next year.

Although buying wheat on the commodities market involves the inherent risk of any stock market "gamble", the cards are stacked much better in this game than in planting more wheat.

What would this accomplish?

1. Possible income for next year.

2. By not planting any wheat, (or cutting back 40 to 80 percent) the farmers would cut the supply, a move heralded by economists as the quickest and surest move to drive up the price of wheat.

3. The farmers will take the first essential step towards control of their market, a power now enjoyed by all other American industries but not by the farmers.

For the first time, farmers are beginning to organize into a cooperative labor unit that can accomplish specified goals set down by their leaders.

An estimated 500 farm strike offices have now been set up around the country, compared to 200 when the strike was first called on Dec. 14, 1977.

Farm strike organizer Lon Kerr, at American Agriculture headquarters in Springfield, Colo., said farmers can buy their crops through the boards of trade for less than the cost of production.

"This action will force grain prices up until they hit 100 percent parity (the amount it costs to grow the wheat,)" he said.

And then it will be worthwhile to grow wheat again.

A piece of Humphrey will live

Another politician is dead.

Hubert Horatio Humphrey, the fast and incessant senate talker and a man who probably wanted the presidency of the United States more than Nelson Rockefeller, did finally lose his courageous battle against cancer.

The usual stunning tributes to the man have been pouring in all weekend. A politician's death seems to erupt the rhetorical elements in fellow politicians, probably whether or not they could stand the sight of the man while he was living. For a dead politician in a sense is the best politician.

A dead politician can't campaign against or disagree with another politician. He leaves only his accomplishments and bits of wisdom however trivial they may be. And these very important heirlooms can serve as valuable guideposts for the sometimes wisdomless politicians he leaves behind.

A POLITICIAN WHO thrusts himself into the nation's limelight can pass on with the satisfaction that whether they deserve the notoriety or not, they in some way influenced many Americans.

Humphrey died knowing that although he never was president, he will be remembered as a knowledgeable and enthusiastic politician who for many years was one of the political fighters for civil rights and for justice to the poor and working man. His bitter defeat in the 1968 presidential election and his other almost foolish tries for the office are nearly irrelevant now that he is dead. These were failures, not accomplishments, so they really won't be remembered.

The press is vital to the tribute process. As it decided how much play to give the politician while he was alive so it decides how to play his death. Cold and calculating, but an essential and important decision in today's fast-moving world. One must be pretty important or popular to get the front page. Humphrey being a former vice president, but unsuccessful presidential contender falls just short of super billing in this week's press productions.

AS HE WAS in many things during his life, this excellent politician must be second, behind Anwar Sadat's pronouncements concerning the Middle East peace effort.

But Humphrey's great importance is still there — a little shaded by a more explosive issue.

Tributes to dead politicians are something the press and the American public are ready for, so the event is somewhat less than earth shattering. The politician's career has been before the public's eye for years. They are just something that need to be and are expected to be written, sort of a reward for becoming a public figure and influencing people, be it good or bad influence.

Tributes really know no bounds concerning honesty and decency in people. If the politician has been notable and has influenced some people then something good will be found in him, no matter how hard it has to be looked for.

IT WILL BE interesting to read the tributes that appear after Richard Nixon dies. Despite an imprint on history that is as black as it could possibly be, this disgraced president will undoubtedly be noted as an achiever for peace in the world. And rightly so, for Nixon did accomplish much in his presidency, especially in the area of foreign affairs.

Nixon influenced many, as evidenced by the criminal convictions handed down during the Watergate scandal. This influence, although bad in many cases, qualifies him for top billing in the press. Besides, he was President of the United States for six years.

Politicians can learn from Nixon's mistakes, and that is why his presence in American politics is important.

As Humphrey is laid to rest and the tributes ring on, it should be remembered that there are other politicians alive today who have probably as much to offer in wisdom and knowledge as Humphrey did.

Citizens join prostitutes to battle floating brothel

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (AP)—An "odd couple" alliance of Rotterdam prostitutes and embarrassed citizens is trying to torpedo city plans for a floating brothel and sex center in the world's busiest harbor.

The prostitutes complain that a sex palace in the public eye will frighten off their trade, and other critics say the so-called "Eros Center" will give Rotterdam a bad name.

"Nine out of 10 girls will tell you that this is a bad idea," said Leen Persy, 58, who operates a hotel and bar in the Katendrecht, the bustling red-light district on Rotterdam's south side.

"When you pick up a prostitute in Katendrecht, nobody sees you," Persy said, "but in going to the Eros Center, everybody will see you, maybe even your neighbors."

PROSTITUTES oppose the plan on economic grounds as well.

"The girls now rent rooms in Katendrecht at about $22 a day. On the boat they'll be paying at least twice that," Persy said.

The Rotterdam City Council began planning the Eros Center in 1974 in response to public complaints that prostitution and related crime was spreading outward from Katendrecht to the city's smart residential districts.

The scheme will concentrate Rotterdam's thriving sex industry on a 400-bed ship that would be moored alongside the Oud Poortgebouw—the old port building—an abandoned area of this teeming harbor.

Although prostitution is technically illegal, it has been tolerated by authorities here for many years and its practitioners are seldom prosecuted.

Parents harbor no hatred for daughter's murderer

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP)—"We love this special person from the bottom of our hearts," said Golden Bristol of the man who murdered her daughter.

The tiny housewife from Dearborn, Mich., confessed to a little nervousness as she spoke to a group of inmates in the prison chapel at California Men's Colony. She and her husband, Bob, had driven 2,000 miles to see their "special person," prisoner Michael Keeyes, who was convicted of murdering their daughter, Diane.

The body of Diane, then 20, was found in 1970 in San Diego's North Park area. She had been strangled. She had been selling encyclopedias door-to-door.

The Bristols said God led them on their mission, a journey of forgiveness that prompted their "friends and loved ones to shake their heads because they could not understand."

"We harbored no hatred, no revenge," Mrs. Bristol told the congregation of 60 prisoners Saturday-night. "We knew God could make something good out of this pain."

MRS. BRISTOL said that in 1970 when she and her husband received "the devastating news that our daughter Diane had been raped and brutally murdered, it cut like a knife into the depths of our souls. We had the normal human reaction of grief and anguish."

"Didn't I have the right to be filled with a red-hot hate? But where would it have gotten me? It wouldn't have brought my daughter back."

After Keeyes' imprisonment, the Bristols, a religious couple, began to correspond with him through the Rev. Joe Mason, director of the Prison Mission Association in Riverside.

The special service was arranged by Keeyes' prison buddy, Charles "Tex" Watson, a former member of Charles Manson's bloody cult. Watson, who is serving a life sentence in the 1969 Tate-LaBianca murders, is a student chaplain and had originally planned to conduct the service himself, but backed out because of the publicity the meeting inspired.

Food policies aid foreign farmers

EMPORIA — A national food policy can provide a stable income to farmers and a steady food supply to consumers according to Barry Flinchbaugh, assistant to President Acker.

Flinchbaugh spoke to the annual meeting of the Lyon County Livestock Association here Saturday night about the national food policies of the countries he visited on a recent trip to Europe and the Soviet Union.

"It provides a stable income for farmers that allows them to enjoy a standard of living comparable to that of non-farmers," Flinchbaugh said.

"For consumers, it provides an adequate food supply and reduces the control of that supply by outsiders," he said.

SWITZERLAND, West Germany and England have adopted food policies to determine who is going to control their food production, a question the United States needs to address, Flinchbaugh said.

Flinchbaugh also visited the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia with 35 farmers and agribusinessmen on a "People to People" tour. The tour provided Kansas farmers three basic lessons about national food policies, he said.

"The first lesson we learned in England," he said. "Farmers there represent about the same percentage population as in the U.S. — about three and a half to four percent.

"But English farmers are getting a better shake from their government than ours do out of Congress. The reason is simple. They practice the politics of the minority.

"They've got one farm organization that speaks for all. They argue out their differences in private, develop policies from the grass roots up, and when they go to Parliament, they speak with one voice.

"In our country, we have a multitude of farm organizations, we wash our dirty linen in public, and we engage in open warfare that pits farmer against farmer," Flinchbaugh said.

THE second lesson is that the Soviet Union is not a dependable market for American wheat.

One reason for this is variable weather. The Soviets are capable of producing more than they consume, he said, but they also have periods when they produce much less than they need. So they go from a surplus to a deficit depending on the weather.

"Another reason is that the Soviets will buy wheat from the U.S. only as a last resort," Flinchbaugh said.

"Their favorite alternative is to produce it themselves. If they must import, they buy from other communist countries if they can. Next they go to Canada, Argentina or Australia. And if all else fails, they buy from us."

The third lesson is not just for farmers, but for the American people as well, he said.

"In Switzerland, government supports wheat at $12 per bushel. American wheat entering the country at about $4 per bushel is taxed at $8 per bushel. Dollars raised by the tax are used not only to make their domestic production more competitive, but also to support their own agriculture.

"Of course, the consumer ends up paying the bill, and there is no consumer unrest. That's because their food policy is part of their national defense," Flinchbaugh said.

Less hours may mean higher fees

A $4 increase in activity fees for part-time students will be proposed this semester by members of the finance committee of Student Senate.

The increase would pay for the services part-time students have been able to use but have not had to pay for, according to Emily Compton, agriculture senator and committee member.

"The principle behind it is that part-time students can take advantage of all the services and not pay for them, which is not fair to the full-time students," Compton said.

Part-time students currently pay no fees to Recreation Services, student publications, fine arts or to the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK), Compton said.

Full-time students pay $7.75 for these services, she said.

COMPTON said it wouldn't be fair to have part-time students pay the same amount in fees for the services when they take fewer hours than full-time students.

Approximately 1,600 students were enrolled part-time at K-State last semester, according to figures from the Comptroller's Office.

Compton said the increase would also generate some revenue for the services.

The increase must be approved by senate in the form of a bill or approved by the student body in the form of a referendum.

Increased duties, pressure force Rieger's resignation

By DAVE HUGHES

City Editor

Manhattan City Manager Les Rieger resigned from his job Jan. 3 because of a heavy work load and asked to head the city's finance department.

Rieger said he will continue as city manager until a successor is hired.

In a memorandum to the commissioners dated Jan. 3, Rieger said the heavy work load was caused by an increase in city problems and a decrease in administrative help.

He said the growing complexity of city government and Manhattan's increased involvement in federal programs has created "physical and mental pressures...that are detrimental to my well-being."

REIGER, city manager since 1972, said the complexity is due, in part, to the growth problems Manhattan faces.

The increased concern with growth in Manhattan has created the need for more federal assistance.

The heavy work load also was caused by the resignation of the assistant city manager and director of services.

Rieger took over duties of assistant city manager and the director of services work was split between the city manager and city engineer.

Rieger suggested in the memorandum that the commissioners split the job of city manager into two positions: city manager and director of finances. He requested the director of finances job.

THE commissioners, in an executive meeting to consider Rieger's requests, agreed to split the office and give Rieger the head of finances job.

When Rieger takes the finance department post he will have the same salary he has now. The city manager earns $25,765 per year.

Rieger said the new city manager's salary will be fixed according to his experience and qualifications.

The incoming city manager will have problems adjusting to the job, Rieger said.

"If he's had experience in management in other cities and if he's from within the state," he said it will be easier for the person to adjust.

THE person will be familiar with the state laws and budget procedures, he said.

The assistant city manager post has been filled but Rieger declined to name the person.

The position was vacated in September by Paul Sasse who took a city manager's job in south Kansas.

A new director is expected to be chosen between February and March, Rieger said.

The job formerly was held by Jim Chaffee who resigned in November to take a similar post in Bowling Green, Kentucky.

Drunken birds sky high

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP)—Every year, migrating robins flock into Fort Myers to take advantage of the sunshine, warm weather and other amenities—such as Brazilian pepper berries. The fermenting berries make them "drunk as coot," says Charles Foster, Audubon Society president for Southwest Florida. "I've seen them put on some real good shenanigans after they've been in those berries."

Local residents have reported seeing tipsy robins doing aerial acrobatics, chasing each other on the ground, running into solid objects and literally staggering.

Carter loses ground in poll despite recent trip abroad

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' rating of President Carter's performance in office has continued its downward slide despite his recent overseas trip, an Associated Press-NBC News poll shows.

Only 41 percent of those interviewed rated Carter's overall performance as excellent or good. About 57 percent rated his performance only fair or poor, with the remaining 2 percent undecided.

That rating is the lowest for Carter since he entered office one year ago.

Carter's January rating was slightly below that found by an AP-NBC News poll in late November. At that time, 43 percent of those surveyed rated his performance excellent or good, while 54 percent said his work was only fair or poor.

The January poll involved telephone interviews with 1,604 adults last Tuesday and Wednesday.

Households have equal opportunity to voice opinion

WASHINGTON (AP) — Telephone interviews with 1,604 adults Tuesday and Wednesday were the basis for the Associated Press-NBC News poll on what Americans think of President Carter's performance in office.

Telephone numbers were selected for the interviews in a manner which gives every household in the country with a telephone a roughly equal chance of being chosen.

One adult in each household was interviewed with a procedure used to provide the proper balance of male and female respondents.

As with any sample survey, the results of the AP-NBC News poll can vary from the exact opinions of the American public solely because of chance variations in the sample.

FOR A poll of 1,604 adults, the results of the survey vary no more than three percentage points from the views of all American solely because of chance variations in the sample. This error margin is valid at the 95 percent confidence level.

FOREIGN travel traditionally has boosted a president's popularity. And it was expected Carter's seven-nation, nine-day journey two weeks ago would provide him with a similar boost.

An NBC News poll taken in late May after Carter returned found that 61 percent gave Carter a positive rating, with only 28 percent giving him negative marks. That positive rating was up eight points over the finding of the April NBC News poll.

But since that high point in May, Carter's rating has slid.

The seven-nation journey apparently did give a slight boost to Americans' opinion of Carter's performance in foreign policy.

ABOUT 39 percent of those questioned rated Carter's foreign policy performance favorably, versus 55 percent who gave him negative marks.

Those figures are slightly more positive than the 36 percent positive, 56 percent negative ratings found in the November AP-NBC News poll.

Americans' opinion of Carter's role in the Middle East peace negotiations is more positive that it was in November.

Half of those questioned rated his performance as a negotiator excellent or good, with 43 percent giving him only fair or poor marks. The remaining 7 percent were undecided.

In November, the situation was reversed. Half of those questioned gave him poor marks, with only 45 percent rating his role positively.

As with any sample survey, the results of the AP-NBC News poll can vary from the exact opinions of the American public solely because of chance variations in the sample. For a poll of 1,604 adults, the difference due to such chance variations is three percentage points either way.

U. S. deports boa skins

MIAMI (AP)—For some people, one boa skin is one too many, but U.S. Customs in Miami has 200 of the things to try to get rid of.

The rule books don't say much about boa skins, so Customs has asked for a court order authorizing the agency to send the skins back to Colombia.

The boa skins have been in storage for 1½ years—since they were shipped through Miami International Airport bound for Michigan without the needed export permit.

Customs also has a couple of lizard skins which must be deported.

Turbulence in South Africa increases white emigration

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — For the first time since 1960, when racial tensions also ran high, the number of whites leaving South Africa is outstripping the number of whites coming in to seek a new life in this racially segregated land.

For those leaving, it is a decision based on what they see as a bleak future of increasing black-white hostility and possible bloodshed.

Patrick McDuling is one of the whites going away.

"I'm pro-South Africa, but not pro-government," he says. "I don't want my kids to fight for this government. I can see a war situation developing which nobody can win."

McDuling is a 33-year-old bachelor, an accountant whose roots reach to the earliest Dutch-descended Afrikaner settlers.

Concert campouts no more; tickets to be sold by mail

Concert campers can pack away their tents as Union Program Council (UPC) is planning to use a new mail order system to sell tickets for future concerts.

Irene Parsons, UPC concerts coordinator, said she believes the mail order system will work more efficiently because it will give people an equal chance to get concert tickets.

"They won't have to camp out and miss school, work and other activities," Parsons said.

"We will announce the concert, then about a week later we will advertise every day in the Collegian. The mail order forms will be included in the ads," Parsons said.

THE forms will address the buyer's name, address, phone number, ticket price, and the first, second and third choice of the sections wanted.

"They can't pick the exact seat they want, just the section," Parsons said. "There will be a limit of one order per envelope with no more than ten tickets per order. This is tentative right now — there may be some changes."

Mail orders for concert tickets will be accepted through Friday three weeks before a weekend concert, Parsons said. Orders received before Monday will either be sent back or not filled. Persons ordering tickets after

New students get orientation treat

An estimated 800 new students will enroll at K-State Tuesday, according to E. M. Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

The students, who will register Tuesday afternoon in Ahearn Fieldhouse, will take part in a one-day orientation program sponsored by the Center for Student Development today.

After hearing an opening speech by K-State President Duane Acker, the students will hear from representatives from each of the seven undergraduate colleges.

Small group and individual meetings are then planned to help the students plan their spring class schedules.

Optional Monday afternoon meetings are planned with officials from the University For Man, the veterans' office and the Army and Air Force Reserve Officer Training Corps.

Registration for pre-enrolled students will be all-day today and Tuesday morning.

eastern coastal province of Natal, McDuling is the son of a local policeman of Scottish descent and an Afrikaner mother. Unlike most of the highly skilled emigrants, who are generally English-speaking, McDuling was reared in a home where the Dutch-based Afrikaans language was spoken almost all the time.

At a small farewell party for close friends, McDuling said of his decision to go to Australia: "I'm looking 15 years into South Africa's future. Violence is inevitable. I can't see any light at the end of the tunnel."

The latest figures released by the government Statistics Department showed that 22,400 persons left South Africa between January and October 1977, as opposed to 11,900 in the same period in 1976. Immigrants in the same period numbered 21,000 in contrast with 41,000 in 1976, a net 10-month loss of 1,400.

WHITE FLIGHT from South Africa began after racial rioting in 1976 in which more than 600 blacks died. In 1977 mounting international pressure, internal unrest, a depressed economy and difficulty planning a future in troubled times fueled the exodus. Property values in the past two years dropped by 40 percent. While wages remained fairly constant, prices rose.

The quality of life in South Africa, though still good, has declined with the economy and rising international pressure. Youths face a military draft that was recently increased from one to two years.

Doctors, architects, engineers and other professionals are among the most common emigrants — the people leading the country's brain drain. Their skills make them more desirable as immigrants, enabling them to safely navigate myriad immigration regulations of their adopted nations.

Friday will not be guaranteed good seats.

ALL ticket orders will be filled according to the date of the postmark, with earlier postmark dates being filled first, Parsons said.

All remaining tickets will go on sale at the Union Ticket Office and other outlets, Parsons said.

The orders can be picked up on Wednesday, one week before a weekend concert. Unsold tickets and the remaining ticket orders may be picked up the night of the concert.

AVOIDING THE FOUL . . . Mike Evans makes every effort to avoid fouling Colorado's Clayton Bullard after both went for this loose ball in Saturday's contest at Ahearn Field House. Evans scored 22 points on 9-of-13 field goal attempts to lead K-State to a 68-52 victory.

Blackman and Soldner fuel 'Cats to second half surge over Buffaloes

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

A three-point play by Rolando Blackman and seven points from Steve Soldner fueled a second half surge that gave K-State a 68-52 win against Colorado in Ahearn Field House Saturday.

The Wildcats maintained a 46-34 lead through the second half and built it to a 16-point margin with two minutes remaining that gave K-State its first Big Eight win of the season.

Blackman took a Mike Evans feed off a fast break and put up a shot with Colorado's Eddie Lewis hanging all over him that somehow banked into the basket. That play and a Soldner stuff off a Fred Barton feed a minute later seemed to be the impetus that discouraged a Buffalo comeback.

Blackman's and Soldner's heroics came early in the second half after K-State opened the half with a 36-32 lead.

first half by hitting 59 percent of its shots, but slipped to 35 percent in the second half, mainly because they couldn't seem to handle the 1-3-1 defense K-State slapped on them. Scott Langton, who came off the bench to make three steals and block a shot was especially effective.

"Now they've got it in their heads what kind of defense we've got to play," Langton said of K-State's effort. "A lot of guys have forgotten how we played last year."

The 1-3-1 zone "allowed us to get away from them and then we can dictate some things," Coach Jack Hartman said.

Mike Evans scored 22 points, Curtis Redding had 20 and Soldner added 11 to lead K-State.

The Wildcats, with one win and two losses in the Big Eight, will play Oklahoma here Wednesday. The Sooners lost a 91-61 contest to Kansas University, Saturday in Lawrence.

"We've got to strike almost in every frame from here on out," Hartman said of K-State's hopes to repeat as Big Eight Champions.

K-State women drop Bears with 74-51 win

BY KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

With four regulars out with injuries, a young K-State women's basketball team showed signs of blossoming in their 74-51 victory over the Southwest Missouri State Bears Friday night in Ahearn Field House.

Showing some signs of playing with new faces in the lineup, the Wildcats moved sluggishly to a 35-20 halftime lead.

In the second half the Wildcats used their running offense and pressure defense to outscore the Bears 21-6 in the first eight minutes of the half and erase any doubt of the final outcome.

K-STATE head coach, Judy Akers, was pleased with her team's performance in the second half.

"In the second half we broke loose with our running game," Akers said. "I was impressed with our patience. We got some good shots in the second half."

The Wildcats had three players score in double figures, led by Beth Boggs who finished with 20 points. Eileen Feeney added 19 and Kristi Short 14.

The loss dropped the Bears record to 3-9, while the Wildcats moved their record to 9-8, which could be a reflection of numerous injuries that have plagued the Wildcats.

ADDED to the growing list of injured over Christmas break were juniors Laurie Miller and Margo Jones.

Miller suffered a knee injury and Jones a broken finger during the Big Eight Tournament held in Lawrence Jan. 5-7.

Jones is out for at least three weeks with her left hand in a cast, and Miller, who goes to the doctor Monday, will probably be sidelined for several weeks at least.

The injuries are added to the list of sophomore LeAnn Wilcox, out for the season with a knee injury; junior Tami Johnson, out for the season with a knee injury; and freshman Tammie Ronstad who is recovering slowly from knee surgery.

AKERS said there is a positive side to everything and through the loss of starting players to injuries the younger kids are "getting a lot of experience. The accumulation of experience counts."

In light of the injuries Akers believes "we cannot be concerned with how to play without so and so."

"We will continue to be scrappy and aggressive and give it our best," she said.

OVER the Christmas break the Wildcats stomped the Minnesota Gophers 70-30, and also finished fourth in the Big Eight Tournament.

In reference to the Wildcats' fourth place finish in the Big Eight Tournament, Akers said she was "disappointed" with the team's performance, especially in the game against Oklahoma for third place.

"Oklahoma has a good team but I think we were a little down after losing Laurie," (Miller, with a knee injury in the game against KU the night before) Akers said.

"I don't think we were ready to play. We had no concentration."

The Wildcats now prepare to take off on a west coast trip which will include matchups with Nevada-Los Vegas, UCLA and California State-Long Beach.

Cowboy defense dumps Broncos

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Roger Staubach steered the Dallas Cowboys through a sea of Super Bowl mistakes Sunday for a 27-10 victory over the Denver Broncos to capture the world championship of professional football.

Staubach threw one touchdown pass to Butch Johnson in the third quarter and running back Robert Newhouse hurled another on an option play to Golden Richards in the fourth as the Cowboys picked apart the Denver secondary.

Tony Dorsett, forced out of the game in the third period with a twisted right knee, scored the other Cowboys touchdown on a 3-yard run after Dallas intercepted the first of four passes off Broncos quarterback Craig Morton.

The Broncos had boasted that Dallas' only serious receiving threat was flanker Drew Pearson, but Pearson did less damage than any of the other targets in the Cowboys arsenal.

JOHNSON MADE A circus catch in the end zone on a 45-yard bomb from Staubach in the third quarter and Richards grabbed Newhouse's pitch for Dallas' wrapup TD.

Efren Herrera kicked field goals of 35 and 43 yards but missed three other attempts that would have given Dallas a much more comfortable margin through the middle quarters of one of the National Football League's messiest championship games.

Time after time, the fierce "Doomsday II" defense of the Cowboys forced vital Denver turnovers and finally, just as they had predicted, the Dallas defenders chased Denver quarterback Morton clear out of the ball game.

Morton, a former Cowboy who had thrown only eight interceptions all season — lowest of any passer in the American Football Conference — had four aeriels picked off in the first half alone. He finally was lifted in the middle of a Bronco offensive series and replaced by Norris

Sports

Weese, who moved Denver to its only touchdown of the game.

MORTON, NOT A mobile quarterback was a sitting duck for the fierce Dallas defensive rush. Weese, a scrambler, had better success, but not much.

There were a record 10 fumbles by both teams, setting a Super Bowl high water mark for sloppiness.

But Staubach created order from the chaos and the Cowboys defense short-circuited Denver's attack.

The Dallas "Flex" is a defense that depends on each player holding his position, avoiding the trap blocking that sets so many offenses in motion. On Sunday, the Cowboys were not only staying in their lanes, they also were ruining Denver's.

On successive series in the first period, Morton threw soft passes that were easily picked off by Dallas defenders. Each time he threw the ball with Cowboys defenders on top of him.

The first time, the Broncos were on their own 29 when Randy White and Charlie Waters swarmed Morton. As he was heading down, the Denver quarterback threw the ball. It floated softly into the arms of Randy Hughes of Dallas at the Broncos' 25.

ON FIRST DOWN, Staubach hit Billy Joe DuPree for 13 yards for a first down at the 12. Three shots into the line by Newhouse and Dorsett moved it to the 3. On fourth down and inches, Dorsett burst into the end zone.

Now Denver started again, this time from the 40. On second down, Morton dropped back and found Ed "Too Tall" Jones draped over him. His pass was tipped by middle linebacker Bob Bruenig and picked off by cornerback Aaron Kyle at the Dallas 46.

Kyle took the ball to the Denver 35 and Staubach went to work again.

Newhouse and Dorsett ripped off 27 yards on two plays. But then the Broncos stiffened and the Cowboys had to settle for Herrera's 35-yard field goal and a 10-0 lead.

At the end of the period, Denver had managed only eight yards in total offense — three rushing and five passing. Things did not improve for Denver in the second quarter, which was played almost entirely in the Broncos' end of the field.

Five children die in pond-ice break

ELKIN, N.C. (AP)—A romp on a frozen farm pond spelled tragedy for two families after five children plunged through thin ice and drowned, authorities said Sunday.

The bodies were recovered from the pond Saturday night after searchers spotted a stocking cap near a hole in the ice 20 feet from the bank and used boats to break up the ice and investigate.

The pond was 8 to 10 feet deep. Rescue Capt. Roy Cane said the children "evidently had been playing on the ice and, with the weight of all five of them, the ice wouldn't hold them."

The victims were identified as three sisters from one family and a brother and sister from another: Lisa Diane Hutson, 14; Sheila Anne Hutson, 12; Patricia Lynn Hutson, 9; Linda Wood, 12; and Brad Wood, 8, all of Elkin.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Hutson and Mr. and Mrs. J.D. Wood, contacted the rescue squad when the children had not been seen for about four hours.

Four rescue squads and five fire departments joined in the search in 20-degree weather.

The pond is located on farm property about 200 yards across a road from the children's homes.

Carter gets support from business and labor leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) — After a shaky beginning, President Carter ended his first year in office with a good deal of support from some key leaders of both business and labor.

Although there were some dissenters, this support seemed substantial enough to help get Carter's second year in office off to a good start.

Labor leaders seem a little less enthusiastic in 1978 than they were a year ago when Carter took office, while business leaders say many of their early fears have proven to be unjustified.

Carter's retreat from plans to push for the elimination of some business tax breaks in 1978 brought a sigh of relief from many businessmen.

Carter won especially high marks from businessmen for opening lines of communication to the business community, while labor leaders praised his support for a big increase in the minimum wage, welfare reform proposals and support for changes in labor laws.

AMONG business leaders, there was praise for provisions of Carter's new tax program which are intended to stimulate business investment, and his commitment to streamlining cumbersome government regulations.

Irving Shapiro, head of the influential Business Roundtable and chairman of E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., said much of the controversy from Carter's first year in office should be over and that the stage is set for a "placid period" for Carter in 1978.

"They had their share of difficulties, but they came into the latter part of the year in reasonably good shape, avoiding some of the mistakes they made early in the year," he said in an interview.

Business leaders tended to give Carter better marks for the economy's performance in 1977, than did labor chieftains. Shapiro said he thought the economy under Carter was "functioning at a fairly decent level."

But George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, the nation's largest labor organization, criticized "the continued slack in the economy and the high rate of unemployment," which he said clouded the other Carter achievements during the year.

Meany said that while it is still too early to make a judgment on Carter, there were many "pluses" during his first year and that Carter has "brightened the land" with a sense of hope and a spirit of inspiration.

NOT surprisingly, businessmen criticized Carter for some specifics that labor leaders praised.

Some business leaders, for example, disagreed with Carter's support for a higher minimum wage, while labor leaders singled this out for their praise.

Shapiro agreed that unemployment, which was at a three-year low of 6.4 percent in December, was a "big challenge" for Carter, along with reducing the rate of inflation. "It will take time, but progress can be made in that area," he said.

Another generally good assessment of Carter's first year in office came from John deButts, chairman of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

DeButts heads the Business Council, an organization of top corporate executives that serves as a line of communication between government and the business community.

Legislators to rehash old bills, discuss farm inheritance break

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Much of the activity during the second week of the 1978 session shifts to committees where lawmakers will take a fresh look at old bills and a first look at new legislation.

Among items set for consideration this week in various House and Senate committees are tough new nursing home regulations, more lenient inheritance tax laws to protect the family farm and competency-based education.

At 11 a.m. Monday, Chief Justice Alfred Schroeder of the Kansas Supreme Court will address the joint session of the Legislature on the state of the judiciary. The address comes almost one week after Gov. Robert Bennett outlined his legislative recommendations to the House and Senate.

A BRIEFING is set Tuesday morning for members of the Senate Health and Welfare Committee on nursing home bills recommended by the governor.

The legislation would authorize fines and penalties against nursing homes that repeatedly fail to meet health and safety regulations.

The Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee has hearings scheduled Thursday on the first of a series of inheritance tax bills recommended by the governor as a way of helping family farms stay in business. Bennett has proposed increasing the exemption granted to a surviving spouse and adopting a joint tenancy rule which assumes a 50 percent contribution by a surviving spouse to jointly held property.

The Senate Education Committee Tuesday is scheduled to take up a competency-based education bill sponsored by Sen. Billy McCray, (D-Wichita) that would require high school students to take a test twice each year in order to pass.

The House Energy and Natural Resources Committee has scheduled hearings Monday morning on legislation that would require that at least 80 percent of the cars in the state motor pool get 33 miles per gallon on the highway and 24 miles per gallon in the city. If passed, the state would be required to buy the gas-saving cars on Jan. 1, 1979.

STATE officials from several agencies are slated to make appearances throughout the week in House committees to outline their budget requests for fiscal year 1979.

Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell presents his legislative proposals to the House Insurance Committee Tuesday morning and Health and Environment Secretary Dwight Metzler is slated to appear before the House Ways and Means Committee the first three days of the week.

That panel is to hear from Robert Harder, secretary of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, on Thursday.

Two killed in Florida sorority house

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP)—A club-wielding attacker crept into a sorority house at Florida State University early Sunday and brutally beat four young women while they slept, killing two of them, police said.

A short time later, someone who police believe was the same intruder, broke into a nearby home and severely beat another young woman student, authorities said.

Police said the other women in the Chi Omega sorority house were asleep during the attacks, but the assailant was spotted by one of the residents as she returned shortly after 3 a.m. from a date.

"She saw a man running down the stairs and out the front door. He was carrying a club or a limb or a piece of wood of some sort," said police spokesman Carl Swanson.

SWANSON said she heard moaning in the upstairs rooms, found the injured women and called police.

The dead women were sleeping in separate rooms and were attacked after the intruder apparently entered through an unlocked side door.

Comic strip adds humor to pages

With today's Collegian, first of the spring term, comes a new comic strip drawn exclusively for college newspapers.

"Downstown" appears on page 15, along with "Peanuts" which will remain a daily feature of the Collegian. Both strips will appear on the next to the last page of each issue.

"Downstown" was started two years ago and is now followed daily by more than 100,000 readers of major college newspapers. Its creator is Tim Downs of the University of Indiana who syndicates the strip from his Bloomington, Ind., studios.

Removal of "Peanuts" from the editorial page will allow more space for editorials, columns and letters to the editor. After a few weeks of exposure to "Downstown," readers are urged to tell Collegian staffers what they think of the strip, which is being used on a trial basis for one semester only.

They were identified as Margaret Bowman, 21, and Lisa Levy, 20, both of St. Petersburg. Police said an autopsy determined that Miss Levy also had been strangled.

The other two victims shared a room. They were identified as Karen Chandler, 21, of Tallahassee, and Kathy Kliner, 20, of Miami.

Also attacked about two hours later was Cheryl Ann Thomas, 21, of Richmond, Va., who lived in a duplex three blocks away from the sorority house.

Miss Chandler and Miss Thomas were listed in critical condition after undergoing surgery. Miss Kliner was in fair condition.

Police said all five victims had been severely beaten around the head and upper body. Miss Chandler suffered a broken jaw, a broken arm and broken fingers in addition to severe cuts and the loss of several teeth.

"This guy has got to be some kind of nut," said Leon County Sheriff Ken Katsaris.

Facilities plan has 'too many chiefs'

By TIM HORAN
Staff Writer

Since K-State President Duane Acker announced his plans to restructure the troubled department of University Development almost five months ago, many workers have criticized the plan saying there will be "too many chiefs and not enough Indians."

"What the administration is doing right now can be described like this: You have a team of mules pulling a load. In order to pull the load faster, you get rid of three mules and hire on three more drivers with bigger whips," said one of the 300 staff members in the department last semester.

Many employees also don't think the reorganization will do what it was designed to do—eliminate the department's lack of communication and organization.

Acker and Paul Young, vice president for University facilities, reached the decision to reorganize after meeting last July and August with these same staff members and asked them what they felt was wrong and right about the present system.

"We had places where there were six to seven steps in the process of information (from the source of information to the vice president)," Acker said last August.

THE new system is supposed to cut those steps down to a maximum of three (from the source to the foreman to the section head to the vice president).

The plan attempts to do this by dividing the department into seven different functions: Security and Traffic, architectural services, landscape and campus planning, supportive and business services, space allocations, building and grounds and utility systems.

Each section will eventually have its own section head, with the exception of space allocations, which will be handled by Young until he leaves on sabbatical next year.

Thus the department will have a horizontal organization of the individual section heads (the seven above) rather than a vertical one which was used in the past.

It's this horizontal organization which stirred up the University employees.

FOR EXAMPLE, a simple remodeling project may have employees from more than one section, possibly from building repairs, electrical systems (utility systems) and campus planning (architectural services) working together.

There would also be three section heads overseeing the workings. In the event of problems, which happen often, the workers wouldn't know to which section head they should answer, and there's the possibility the section heads would disagree.

Of course Young and Gene Cross, named Monday as the new associate vice president for facilities, are directly in charge but a time factor would be involved if every little problem had to be handled by their office.

THERE is also merit to the charge that the administration is hiring too many "chiefs."

Vince Cool, current assistant to the vice president of facilities, will head architectural services, Paul Nelson will continue as head of Security and Traffic but section heads for supportive services, landscape and campus planning (selection committees are now reviewing applications for these offices) and building and grounds and systems still need to be hired.

Thus three new executive positions will be created (assuming Case Bonebrake, director of the physical plant is hired to fill one of the four open positions) in addition to the associate vice president. Someone will also have to be hired to replace Young when he leaves the department.

Acker said last August both positions were needed because the growing responsibilities of the office were too big for one person to handle.

But even with all the criticism such a facelift has been long overdue and the system can work effectively if the new leaders can realize the system's faults and cooperate with each other.

Vance in Israel, predicts long, difficult peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP)—Secretary of State Cyrus Vance flew here Monday determined to play an active role in the new round of Egyptian-Israeli peace talks, but U.S. officials cautioned that "instant agreements" are not in the offing.

Vance expects long and difficult negotiations and even occasional breakdowns, a senior U.S. official told reporters on Vance's arrival for the formal resumption of talks Tuesday.

Another summit meeting between Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin may be needed to keep up the momentum, the official said. "You're not going to find instant agreements."

VANCE, who will be here through Thursday, promised "to actively participate" in the talks between Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and his Egyptian counterpart, Mohammed Kamel.

Less than three hours after his arrival, Vance held a brief private meeting with Begin. They were joined later by Dayan and top Israeli and American officials.

The negotiations that begin today in a Jerusalem hotel suite will focus from the start on the Palestinian issue.

Vance is expected to offer proposals for an interim arrangement for the 1.1 million Palestinians living in Israeli-occupied territory. It would stop short of independence but would give them more autonomy than the "self-rule" proposed last month by Begin.

In Cairo, meanwhile, qualified Egyptian sources said Egypt would be considerably more flexible on the Palestinian question than may have been suggested by a weekend dispute over how to word the issue on the Jerusalem conference's agenda.

ONE source said Egypt's insistence on Palestinian self-determination should not necessarily lead to a totally independent state that could be a threat to Israel. Instead, it should result in an entity linked with neighboring Jordan "with some attributes of an independent state, but not all," he said.

The sources said the Egyptians consider a closely controlled transitional period toward self-determination to be the best means of reaching this end.

The American officials said the active role by Vance, urging acceptance of U.S. proposals on key issues, was desired by both Egypt and Israel.

By backing a temporary approach on the Palestinian question, the Americans are side-stepping the more difficult and emotional issue of a permanent "homeland."

So deep is the division over the Palestinians that just finding a way to list the issue on the agenda required U.S. mediation with so-called "neutral" language.

The agenda dispute, which caused a day's delay in the opening of the negotiations, was resolved when the two sides agreed to drop references to Palestine. In addition, a generalized three-clause format was adopted, instead of a detailed five-point paper proposed by Egypt.

The agenda, as described by Israeli sources, circumvents the most sensitive points by ignoring or only hinting at them.

Young announces resignation

Paul Young, vice president for university facilities said Monday he will resign his position in early 1979 to take a sabbatical leave before returning to teach mathematics full time at K-State.

Young announced his resignation during a meeting of physical plant employees at which the associate vice president for university facilities was named.

Young said Gene Cross assistant vice president at the University of Delaware would begin work at the new position June 1.

CROSS will not take over Young's position when he resigns. A new vice president will be named, Young said.

"As far as I'm concerned that's not the case," Young said concerning Cross replacing him.

"When I finish my tenure in the department, it would be up to President Acker to decide whether to do that."

"He (Cross) has been hired as associate vice president," Acker said.

"What the future will hold, we'll wait and see," he said about the possibility of Cross taking over Young's job.

Young said age was a major consideration in his resignation, as he will be 63 next year.

His resignation would also give him a chance, Young said to "go where the action is" and return to teaching in the mathematics department. Young began teaching mathematics at K-State in 1947, and for the past seven years while an administrator also taught a section of calculus every fall semester.

YOUNG said Cross would be (see NEW, page 2)

Commission decides legal strategy for civil suit pending against city

By PAUL RHODES
Staff Writer

Decisions concerning the legal representation of the city of Manhattan and several city officials who are charged in a civil law suit were made during a special city commission meeting Tuesday.

The suit is pending in Federal court in Wichita.

The suit, which lists $45,000 in actual damages and $100,000 in punitive damages, was filed in 1977 by Harold Spencer and Rosemary Spencer. The defendants charged in the suit include five present city commissioners, two former commissioners, the director of community development and the city of Manhattan.

According to Richard Seaton, the attorney chosen to represent the defendants, the charges relate to urban renewal action. As stated in a Jan. 4 summons, the defendants are charged with interfering with the plaintiffs' property rights, allowing the plaintiffs' property to be vandalized and removal of the remains of the property in question.

IN 1975 the Urban Renewal Agency made an offer to the Spencers for the property in question, but they refused the offer, according to Community Development Director Marvin Butler.

After refusing the offer, the Spencers retained the property title and the right to use the property as they wished, Butler said. However, the city and the Urban Renewal Agency decided it was necessary to condemn the property, he said.

Butler said the city and the Urban Renewal Agency entered into a condemnation agreement with the Spencers, during which time the property was in the Spencers' care.

"There was some vandalism to the property during this time," Butler said. "Through legal council, the Spencers and the city agreed to remove the remains."

Following the removal, the Spencers filed suit against the city and several specific individuals, Butler said.

ACCORDING to Harold Spencer, there was no agreement for removal of the property between them and the city.

"If there was an agreement, let them (the city) produce a copy of it," Spencer said.

Rosemary Spencer said the reason for the law suit was the "ridiculously low" price they had been quoted for the property.

"If they (the city and Urban Renewal) would have given us a reasonable price for the property in the first place, there wouldn't be any problem now," Harold Spencer said.

The defendants in the case will probably file their response to the charges sometime in early February, according to Seaton.

City commission to review audit

The Manhattan Community Development department's (CD) annual audit will be reviewed by city commissioners at tonight's commission meeting.

The audit, made in October, showed discrepancies between the department's audit and CD's rehabilitation division records.

City Commissioner Robert Linder said the audit indicates "a lack of documentation on action taken by Community Development."

The audit showed that lost payment vouchers and unsigned loans caused discrepancies in CD records.

LOANS, for rehabilitation work, must be signed by the person taking them out before repayment can begin. The vouchers are receipts that prove the city paid money for rehabilitation work done.

Michael Rogers of a local accounting firm will present the auditor's report and make recommendations to the commissioners on how the discrepancies can be corrected, Linder said.

Linder said the audit is a personal problem for which City Manager Les Rieger is responsible. However, if dishonesty is evident the action taken in the problem will become the commission's responsibility.

Big, little together at HHH's funeral

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP)—The nation's leaders joined farmer and factory workers yesterday in a final tribute to Hubert Humphrey, one of the genuine crusaders in American politics.

President Carter and Vice President Mondale, members of Congress, judges and diplomats gathered at House of Hope Presbyterian Church for the funeral of the Minnesota senator they had grown to love and respect during his 30 years in Washington.

He was to be buried in neighboring Minneapolis.

HUMPHREY'S death Friday night after a long battle against cancer prompted an outpouring of sympathy from America's most powerful and influential citizens.

But the tributes that seemed most appropriate for Humphrey, a tireless crusader for civil rights and jobs legislation, were the long lines of anonymous mourners, the people to whom he had dedicated his political life.

People waited for hours in below-zero weather outside the Minnesota Capitol, where his body lay in state, for an opportunity to walk past his casket. The Capitol remained open through the night and by mid-morning, police estimated that more than 20,000 people had filed through the marble rotunda.

SOME WEPT, some sang spirituals and patriotic hymns. Many brought young children to say farewell to the Happy Warrior.

"I admired him because he stood for the average, common working man," said Bob Sands, a 23-year-old welder from Brooklyn Center, Minn. "I shook his hand once when I was 11 years old and I never forgot it."

Thelma Johnson, 30, a black Minneapolis housewife, said Humphrey "did more for the black people and the underprivileged than any man in history, including any president. The least I can do is be close to him at a time like this."

New Orleans cleans up

NEW ORLEANS—It was almost like Mardi Gras—a week-long block party that crescendoed to Super Bowl XII and left this bawdy old city dazed, but an estimated $30 million richer.

They gauge good times here by how much you eat and drink, and by how much litter is left in the street.

"If you measure in terms of garbage, it was a successful event," said Patrick Koloski, director of the city's sanitation department. "For the three-day weekend, we picked up 400 tons of trash off French Quarter streets. On a normal three-day weekend, we pick up maybe 50-60 tons."

"For an entire 10-day Carnival season, we'll pick up about 10,000 tons out of the Quarter, so the Super Bowl has to rank pretty high."

Mondale on new mission

WASHINGTON—Vice President Walter Mondale, embarking on his third diplomatic mission for President Carter, visits Canada and Mexico this week, with energy a focal point of his trip.

The vice president, who spent five days last week in western states and traveled to Minnesota for Sen. Hubert Humphrey's funeral Monday, flies to Ottawa on Tuesday for meetings with Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and other Canadian leaders.

On Wednesday he flies to Edmonton, Alberta, and then back to Washington in time for Carter's State of the Union address the following day.

On Friday morning the vice president takes off again, this time for a meeting in Mexico City with Mexican President Jose Portillo and weekend visits to Indian ruins in the Yucatan city of Merida before returning to Washington on Sunday evening.

Soviets in orbit

MOSCOW—Two Soviet spacemen returned to earth Monday after an unprecedented linkup in space, leaving two comrades behind in an orbiting lab for a possible try at a record time aloft.

Western space experts speculated the cosmonauts may try to break the Soviet mark of 61 days aloft or the American record of 84 days in space set in 1974 by the third crew to man the Skylab space station.

Tass, the official Soviet news agency, described the mission as "a most important step along the road of creating permanently operating manned orbital stations with relievable crews."

The two teams of cosmonauts joined in a historic triple linkup with the Salyut-6 space station last week. The lab, in orbit since Dec. 10, was sandwiched between two Soyuz crafts marking the first time two ships docked with the same space station.

Dow Jones at record low

NEW YORK—The stock market took another beating Monday, closing lower amid worries about higher interest rates, the dollar's vulnerability on foreign exchange markets, President Carter's tax-cut plans and the continuing squabble over a national energy policy.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials closed down 3.99 at 771.74, the lowest closing since April 9, 1975. The closely watched index has lost 59.43 points so far this year.

There were nearly twice as many declines as advances, 949 issues falling in value and 464 rising.

"Never in the 80 years that records have been kept has the market gotten off to a worse start in a new year," said Larry Wachtel, an analyst with the Wall Street firm of Bache Halsey Stuart Shield.

Farmer's plight could bring depression, farmers warn

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP)—Warning that the Depression of the 1930s began in the farm belt, members of American Agriculture called Monday for adoption of an eight-point program to ease the financial plight of today's farmer.

Witness after witness who testified before a field hearing of the Senate Agriculture Committee brought the same dire message: the problems of the farmer today will be the problems of America tomorrow.

One of those receiving the loudest applause was Rodney Shay, a farmer from St. Francis, Kan. who, he said, learned how to go broke when he began farming 14 years ago.

"If we go down, we're gonna take this country with us," Shay warned, adding, "I believe this country had better not call our bluff."

His testimony was similar to many of the 25 who spoke before

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., a committee member, and several hundred farmers who braved a snow storm and bitter cold to attend the day-long session.

"The agricultural economy is more depressed than it has been at any time since the Great Depression," said Doyle D. Rahjes of Agra, Kan., vice president of the Kansas Farm Bureau. "And that national tragedy ... was rooted in and caused by the disastrous agricultural economy of the time."

Sen. Dole will not 'cheer' for farmers

Senator Bob Dole, the voice of the Kansas farmer? It's nice to know we have a senator in Washington D.C. who is concerned about vital issues that mean so much to Kansans.

Take the Crown of St. Stephen (from Hungary), for example.

Now I bet there isn't one red-blooded Kansas farmer who didn't cling to his radio or TV set, anxiously waiting for each new development in the saga of the Hungarian Crown.

Or how about the Panama Canal?

The Senator was right in the thick of this crisis, sticking up for the farmers here who may want to drive their tractors through the canal someday. Fear not, he is guarding our rights.

Of course, Sen. Dole can't be expected to find time for everything.

Take the farmers' strike, for instance.

At a news conference in Kansas City earlier this month, Dole was asked if he would endorse the farm strike.

He said he would not.

"If they want a cheerleader, they'll have to get another boy," Dole said.

It appears that Sen. Dole cares more about his "other interests" than for the fate of the farmer.

He wouldn't want to alienate a special interest group back east simply for the meager cause of lending moral support to the farmers of Kansas.

People are also wondering why Governor Bennett endorsed the strike while Dole did not.

But the Senator, as always, has something to say.

He is accusing the Carter administration of a lack of action on farm problems.

In the same press conference that he refused to endorse the farm strike, Dole said, "I am concerned about the lethargic manner in which the Carter administration has addressed the most serious farm situation that has confronted our nation since the days of the great depression."

Yes, Sen. Dole has not lost his style. He may be our next president.

Admittedly, Dole has many fine points.

He's on many key committees in the U.S. Senate and wields great power and influence.

His campaigning tactics are very effective and successful, although many people describe them as "dirty" and "mudslinging."

And, in a close election, the Senator has the admirable talent of bursting into tears at campaign rallies.

What more could you ask for in a president?

Issues: K-State, 1977

Last year was a typical year for K-State. Looking back over past years' front pages of the Collegian, none of this year's top stories were new, except for the issue of closed meetings, and if I could scan the next few years' front pages the same old subjects will probably still be around.

Prices go up, there's no place to park on campus, sports fans yell for new and better sports facilities but no one has any money to build one. There's complaints about students not using sidewalks, smoking in the wrong places and getting raped in the bushes (and in the dorms).

Student Senate wants more money as does every one else and the Collegian does its best to tell it all (at least we try).

These are what I consider the top five stories of 1977 (you may disagree but then it's my story).

1)INFLATION. The price of coffee went up and the cup size went down. Beer, gas, books, tuition, dorm rent, food (even doughnuts) and minimum wage took a jump.

On Feb. 1 a real battle started in the senate chambers when the Student Senate Finance Committee recommended that a referendum be placed before the students to increase the full-time student activity fee by $8. It would be in addition to a $50 tuition increase, $5 student health fee increase and the $6 slated for the recreational complex.

Very few of the student leaders were in favor of the increase. The candidates for student body president knew they wouldn't get votes supporting it and even then President Chris Badger, who had nothing to lose, threatened to veto such a recommendation.

At first it looked like the increase was lost but a student senate task force decided that the K-State Union needed at least $4 more per student or it would have to cutting back on services. Union Director Walt Smith dittoed the statement and a vote was on. Of course the one-third of the student body needed to vote didn't and Senate had the pleasure of voting in the increase—$5 for every full-time student and $8 for every part-time student.

By no means is the subject closed for 1978. It'll be tough on senate to meet allocation requests without raising fees (already recreational services is asking for more money). If the result of 78 turns out like last year's, students will again reach deep into their pockets, for tuition (it can't help but increase), recreation (other than booze), books (no comment), the Union (they sell the books), and it'll be a $10 raise to build a new feildhouse.

2)RAPE. She cried rape—and someone listened—and something was done about it.

All hell broke loose when a women reported that she had been gang raped early one morning the the Athletic Dorm (now Edwards Hall). It took a while but with help from University officials and Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter charges were filed against five men.

The incident started people talking, and other, similar incidences of rape were said to have taken place in the dorm. One A-Dorm resident went so far as to say "the Athletic Dorm is like a zoo."

In the fall the leaves started to dry up and die but the issue of rape stayed alive. So alive that a group of women got mad and stormed into K-State President Duane Acker's office and demanded that something be done.

K-State now has better lighting, a map showing the "well-lit" paths on campus, emergency phones and no "reported" rapes.

3)COACHES. It was a confusing year for K-State's two leading coaches. Jack Hartman got the ball rolling after winning the Big 8 championship and then announced he was leaving the cracker box fieldhouse and crowded locker rooms for something better (something worth a pay cut). He accepted the position as head coach of his alma mater, Oklahoma State.

On the plane flying south he suddenly realized there was something special about fans who were willing to camp out for basketball tickets as much as three weeks in advance (although they didn't because the selling date was moved up) and he returned.

This year Hartman may leave again but with the possibility of a new arena it's anybody's guess.

It was a dull year for football and the only excitement was when Ellis Rainsberger resigned as coach. He later said he was given an ultimatum, resign or be fired.

For 1978 it'll be an uphill fight to rebuild a losing team that plays against, traditionally, the toughest teams in the nation.

4)SUNSHINE. It was more like jail-light for student senate when they voted by secret ballot to elect (as they always have) the senate chairman. According to University Attorney Richard Seaton they could have violated a Kansas law prohibiting closed meeting and secret ballot. Of course no court in Kansas would send K-State's leading students to the hole for 30 days for doing it once but they did it again.

The matter was finally cleared up by Attorney General Curt Schneider who said the governing body had no real power to make their actions binding and they could vote as they pleased.

Later in the fall senate passed a bill requiring all meeting and committees to be open but the bill must be ratified by at least six of the college councils. To date five have passed it and two voted it down.

5)PARKING. Even the city got tired of going round and round and finding no place to park but there was still no answer to this one.

A recommendation will be made to gravel an area north of campus for temporary storage parking. There will also be some new faces in K-State Department of Facilities to review the subject but chances are they will be unsuccessful in finding the long range answer as well.

A-credit-no credit proposal under Faculty Senate's eye

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

A-credit-no credit, the Student Senate proposal to amend the current credit-no credit system, will be discussed today by Faculty Senate at 3:30 in the Union Big 8 room.

The proposal, which would give a letter grade of A for A work, credit for B, C and D work and no credit for F work, was entered on the Faculty Senate agenda by the Executive Committee despite a five-to-four vote against the policy by the Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee.

Because of the close vote, the academic affairs committee decided to advance the proposal to Executive Committee for consideration.

The proposal passed Student Senate last spring by an overwhelming majority.

FRANK ORAZEM, Faculty Senate chairman, said that while a major portion of the faculty is concerned about the way the current system has been used, he couldn't pinpoint what type of action the senate would take on the proposal.

Terry Matlack, student body president, said he does not expect the controversial issue to pass during Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting.

"But I think its within the realm of possibility to be passed in the long run," Matlack said.

"I expect movement in the area (credit-no credit) in some manner," he said.

Student Senate preparation for the long awaited confrontation included sending out informational sheets to Faculty Senate members outlining the proposed A-credit-no credit system and the arguments in support of it, Matlack said.

Although Matlack admitted it would be hard to pack the Big 8 room with student senators for the meeting, he said every effort would be used to get as many interested students there as possible.

Hess resigns alumni post

H. Dean Hess, director of the K-State Alumni Association for the past 17 years has resigned, effective June 30.

In a letter to Linton Hull, alumni association president, Hess, a 1950 K-State graduate, said his decision to resign was prompted by "personal considerations and by a concern for the leadership that the Alumni Association needs in the next few years."

"When I accepted my position in May 1961, I set several hard goals for myself in accomplishing the tasks that require immediate and long-range attention," Hess said. "Subsequently, and in retrospect, these have been attended to. We have come a long way."

Hess was active at both regional and national levels in the old American Alumni Council (AAC) and was one of the AAC members involved in bringing about the merger of AAC with the American College Public Relations Association in 1974.

He has served on the board of directors of the new organization the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education (CASE), since 1974, and this past July was named national chairman-elect designate for CASE, an organization of 8,000 members from almost 2,000 member institutions.

Kentucky still number one

By The ASSOCIATED PRESS
It was a tough week all around for last week's Top Twenty, and the results are shown in the latest Associated Press college basketball poll.

The elite 20 combined for a dismal 32-10 record, but No. 1 Kentucky kept on rolling, winning twice to improve its record to 12-0. The Wildcats had an easy time with Auburn and LSU, and collected all 46 first-place votes, good for 920 points. Of the next nine teams, only No. 9 Louisville held onto its previous ranking.

Marquette, the defending NCAA champion, jumped from fourth to second, winning three times including a 97-81 triumph over Nevada-Las Vegas. The Warriors, 12-1, gathered 808 points.

UCLA moved from seventh to third, the most significant jump of the week. The Bruins beat Oregon and Oregon State to run their record to 13-1 and got 613 points. Indiana State, the nation's only other major unbeaten, won twice and moved from sixth to fourth. The Sycamores are now 12-0 and received 576 points.

Sports

NORTH CAROLINA had a nightmarish week, losing to Duke on Saturday, and narrowly escaping with a two-point victory against Wake Forest Sunday.

The Tar Heels, 13-2, dropped from No. 2 to No. 5 in accumulating 538 points. Arkansas suffered their first loss of the season, at Texas, and felt the result by dropping from third place to sixth.

The Razorbacks are now 14-1, and received 457 points. Notre Dame, 8-3, lost to San Francisco and beat St. Bonaventure by a point and fell from fifth to seventh.

The Irish notched 324 points. Kansas improved two rungs to No. 8 in collecting 311 points. The Jayhawks, now 13-2, beat Oklahoma and Oklahoma State convincingly.

Louisville remained at No. 9, improving its record to 10-2 with a victory over Georgia Tech.

Michigan State jumped into the Top Ten with a pair of Big Ten triumphs. The Spartans now are 12-1 and gathered 251 points. They were No. 12 a week ago.

The Second Ten is headed by Syracuse, which dropped from No. 8 as a result of their 86-81 loss to lightly regarded Pittsburgh. The Orangemen are followed by Providence, Virginia, Holy Cross, Texas, Nevada-Las Vegas, Duke, DePaul, Georgetown and New Mexico.

Dallas victory proves 'plastic face' smiles

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tom Landry let his emotions run rampant Monday.

He smiled a lot.

"I don't know about you, but I'm not feelin' very chipper this morning," he told a news conference the day after the night of Super Bowl XII and his Dallas Cowboys' 27-10 victory over Denver. "I didn't get much sleep. We all were very keyed up after the game and we partied a lot...y'know."

The coach of the National Football League champions, often characterized as being little more than a computer, a stoic, was little more than that again the day after his second Super Bowl triumph.

"I'm an emotional man," he said in his usual monotone. "I just keep it inside a lot more than other men. But I'll tell you one thing; I was emotional last night." And he winced a bit.

LANDRY said the current team which demolished the Broncos on defense was not as good as his first Super Bowl champion squad, but only because of its youth. "Based on the experience we had then, I'd say that was the best, because we performed on an even keel, because we knew exactly how well we were going to play each week," he said of that team which walloped Miami 24-3 on Jan. 16, 1972, in Super Bowl VI at New Orleans' Tulane Stadium.

Giant Russian squad set to attack K-State

The Soviet Union National team, fresh from a last second victory over the UCLA Bruins Sunday afternoon, invade Ahearn Field House Thursday night to take on the K-State Wildcats.

Saying the 'Cats will be at a definite height disadvantage in this game would be an understatement.

The Russians feature such giants as 7-4 Vladimir Tkachenko, 7-1 Alexander Belostennyi, with Nikolai Deriugin, Andrei Lopatov and Anatoliy Mishkin, all at 6-10.

Add 6-8 Sergei Tarakanov, and five others 6-5 or taller, and the Russians display a lineup that makes even one of KU's stature look like midgets.

"We will try to finesse them as diplomatically as possible since physically they are out of our league," said 'Cat head coach Jack Hartman.

The Russians also feature 6-5 Alexander Salnikov, who is considered to be the best pure shooter in basketball outside of the United States.

K-State is one of five U.S. teams to entertain the Russian team. After defeating UCLA, the Bronco fanatics won't be crushed

DENVER (AP)—A thousand shivering fans stood on the roof of an airport parking lot Monday, waving their orange banners and chanting "We love our Broncos," as the Denver Broncos returned in defeat from Super Bowl XII.

Most of the players were whisked away in a bus, but there was a roar of approval as Coach Red Miller, quarterback Craig Morton, running back Otis Armstrong and tight end Riley Odoms walked into the midst of the crowd.

Backs were slapped, hands were shaken and a woman kissed Miller on the cheek.

Denver's Cinderella season came to a crushing end in New Orleans Sunday as the Dallas Cowboys beat the Broncos 27-10 for the National Football League championship.

It was 17 degrees in Denver Monday as the crowd estimated at 1,000 gathered to welcome home the Broncos.

The hard-core, emotional faithful cheered as Miller walked from the terminal. "Thanks for the memories," said a hand-lettered sign.

In the crowd was Denver housewife Rosemary Cochran, who brought her two young children and mother with her. Asked why she had come, she replied, "Just the desire to be here. I had to do it."

Russians travel to Brigham Young tonight before arriving in Manhattan Thursday.

After facing the 'Cats, the Soviets will still have dates remaining with Providence and Connecticut.

The 'Cats who must first face the Oklahoma State Cowboys in a Big Eight matchup Wednesday night, will not have much time to recuperate from the evils of the Russian giants before they must face the KU Jayhawks Saturday night in Lawrence.

According to the sports information department this will mark the first meeting between the 'Cats and a foreign team since K-State played Yugoslavia several years ago.

The K-State-Soviet Union game will be played under NCAA rules, with tipoff scheduled for 7:35 p.m. in Ahearn Field House. Plenty of tickets still remain.

Super Bowl...super bore

Never has a Super Bowl been known to be underpublicized and Super Bowl XII will definitely not go down in the books as an exception to the rule.

For the two weeks preceding Super Bowl Sunday the American public found itself bombarded with irrelevant information about the Denver Broncos and the Dallas Cowboys.

Newspapers and radios across the country kept faithful football followers informed with detailed day-to-day reports of the Dallas and Denver coaching staffs, players, wives and children.

Television went so far as to televise a movie entitled "Superdome" six days before the Super Bowl.

"Superdome," an ABC Monday Night Movie, was filled with intrigue, sex and murder, revolving around an attempt by gamblers to "fix" the Super Bowl.

Dickey picks five coaches, nears complete grid staff

While others were taking a break over Christmas new Head football coach Jim Dickey was at work trying to pick out a coaching staff capable of bringing a winning football season to K-State.

Dickey's latest choice came Saturday when he announced that George Walstad would be retained on the Wildcat staff as defensive line coach.

Walstad, who held the position of offensive coordinator for the Wildcats under Ellis Rainsberger last season was the fifth coach named to Dickey's staff.

The other four are:

—Carl Selmer, offensive coordinator. Selmer was the offensive line coach at North Texas State last season and formerly held that same position at Nebraska during the Cornhuskers rise to power.

—Gary Darnell, defensive coordinator. Darnell, an Oklahoma State graduate and former aide there, comes from North Carolina where he was linebacker coach.

—Bobby Thompson, recruiting coordinator and backfield coach.

'Cat women head west

An injury-depleted Kansas State women's basketball team opens a three-game road trip to the West Wednesday, meeting the Nevada Lady Rebels at Las Vegas.

The Wildcats also are slated to face UCLA Friday and California State-Long Beach Saturday. The 'Cats head west without four regular starters who have been sidelined with injuries.

Probable starters for K-State are 5-7 senior Kristi Short and 5-6 freshman Gayla Williams at guard, 5-9 sophomore Michelle Campbell and 5-10 sophomore Eileen Feeney at forward, and 6-1 junior Beth Boggs at center.

Feeney is the club's leading scorer averaging 13.6 points a game while Boggs is the top rebounder making the trip, averaging 6.3 per contest.

Nevada, with a 12-0 record, is led by 5-11 senior post Belinda Candler who is averaging over 25 points and 14 rebounds an outing.

In the lone meeting of the two schools to date, K-State upset Nevada 73-71 here last year when the Lady Rebels were undefeated and ranked third nationally.

UCLA stood 6-3 at the start of the week. Friday's matchup will be the first between K-State and UCLA.

California State-Long Beach stands 7-1 going into the week.

NFL COMMISSIONER, Pete Rozelle, criticized the movie as being "ill-timed" and "in poor taste."

In fact, the Super Bowl as a whole could be referred to as in "poor taste."

Just like Christmas, the Super Bowl is becoming more commercialized every year.

The public has found it almost impossible to hide from the tracking claws of Super Bowl mania, especially when it comes down to the Saturday before or Super Bowl Sunday.

CBS televised a Super Bowl preview on the CBS Sports Spectacular Saturday afternoon and followed it up with a "salute to the game" with Super Night at the Super Bowl, Saturday evening.

And as if that wasn't enough for the normal football maniac CBS started Super Bowl broadcasting Sunday with a 90-minute NFL Today pre-game show.

OF COURSE, COINCIDING with the pre-game show was the Super Bowl prediction by Jimmy (the Greek) Snyder. As usual, Snyder was far from being on the right track once again as he predicted the game would be dead even through five quarters.

Snyder's overall weekly NFL prediction record for this year came to 82 wins, 106 losses and eight ties.

The ironic thing about all this build up is that the Super Bowl has had a past history of dull football games.

Of the 11 previous Super Bowls only one or two were worthy of such vast exposure.

Super Bowl XII, unfortunately, will go down as number ten in the overexposed, dull ranks.

Dallas was never really threatened. They took advantage of sloppy Denver play to waltz to a 27-10 victory.

THE MOST EXCITEMENT on the field was found in the battle of who had the better looking cheerleaders, or counting how many times Tom Brookshier or Pat Summerall, the Super Bowl commentators, said "Denver isn't out of this game yet."

The television audience kept itself busy by estimating how many sponsors were rich enough to pay the $300,000 a minute for air time during time outs.

The widest publicized record set in Super Bowl XII, appropriately enough, was for the most fumbles by both teams, 10.

Super Bowl? Maybe it should be entitled "Super Bull" or "Super Bore" instead.

Park pegs dozens in payoff scandal

SEOUL, South Korea (AP)—Tongsun Park's chief American interrogator said Monday the one-time Washington lobbyist is providing "very valuable" information about the Capitol Hill pay-off scandal and probably will be questioned for a total of 70 hours more.

Acting Deputy U.S. Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti also told reporters he would fly back to Washington Tuesday, leaving the Park questioning to the remaining five members of his Justice Department team.

He said policy matters had been worked out so that his subordinates could continue the questioning routinely. South Korean investigators are also participating. The sessions, in their third day Monday, will last about a week more, Civiletti said.

PARK emerged from two hours of questioning Monday morning and told reporters, "I think things are going well."

Civiletti said the testimony of the 42-year-old Korean rice dealer, central figure in the scandal, is "very valuable because it is first-hand information and in many instances it provides a basis for thorough analysis together with other evidence the investigation has produced."

But he added that the interrogation was "difficult and time-consuming and takes attention."

Civiletti refused to give details of the interrogation, but Rep. Bruce Caputo (R-N.Y.), who sat in on the first two days of questioning as an observer for the House Ethics Committee, has reported Park testified he gave "hundreds of thousands of dollars" to congressmen and U.S. executive branch officials.

PARK is accused of trying to buy favors for South Korea on Capitol Hill. More than 20 former and present congressmen have acknowledged receiving money or other gifts from him but denied any wrongdoing.

Italian government topples; Communists push for power

ROME (AP)—Italy's 39th government since the overthrow of Fascism in World War II fell Monday. Premier Giulio Andreotti resigned in the midst of economic turmoil, political violence and a Communist drive for power in this NATO country.

President Giovanni Leone scheduled talks with political leaders Tuesday and is expected to ask Andreotti, 59, the three-time Christian Democrat premier, to try to form a new government by Thursday. But long and difficult negotiations appeared certain.

THE UNITED STATES has strongly opposed entry of the Communists in the government where they would share military information of the Atlantic Alliance.

If a cabinet cannot be formed, elections for a new Parliament would have to be held, but all parties oppose this. Opinion polls indicate elections would further polarize the country, increasing support for the Christian Democrats and Communists at the expense of the smaller parties.

In the past three years, 27 persons — including four this year — have died in political clashes. Most of the victims were youthful members of extremist groups, including the neo-fascist Italian Social Movement on the right and urban guerrilla groups such as the Red Brigades and Armed Proletariat on the left.

ANDREOTTI, who led a one-party minority government for 17 months, resigned after it became clear that the largest Communist party in Western Europe, supported by Socialists and Republicans, would no longer allow his government to continue.

To avoid the prospect of new elections that could aggravate the political crisis, the Christian Democrat Party, which has ruled Italy alone or in coalition since 1945, must find a solution acceptable to the left — cabinet posts for Communist-approved independents, a coalition including the Socialists, policy concessions that would meet concerns of the working class or some other formula not yet aired publicly.

NASA accepts women, blacks

WASHINGTON (AP)—The U.S. space agency on Monday named six women, three black men and an oriental among 35 candidates to fly on the nation's space shuttles in the next decade.

It was the first time that women and minority-group members have been named to the astronaut corps. The group of 35 is the largest contingent of astronauts ever selected and the first group named since 1969.

ALL of the women, two of the blacks and the oriental come aboard in a list of 20 mission specialists — whose main shuttle work will be to conduct medical, astronomy, scientific and other experiments. The other black is one of 15 pilots named who actually will fly the rocket ship.

Robert A. Frosch, head of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the new group will report for training July 1 at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston.

Matlack says no activity fee increase needed

Part-time student activity fees should be re-directed and not raised to pay for services not specifically charged for by line-item, according to Terry Matlack, student body president.

Matlack disagreed with the proposal by some student senators to raise part-time activity fees by $4 to pay for services provided by Recreation Services, student publications, fine arts and the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK).

"There is no need to have an increase in the activity fee. Student Senate just needs to earmark a portion of the activity fee to go to these services," Matlack said.

Matlack said there is no way to determine how much to charge part-time students in activity fees.

"There is no way to be fair to part-time students because who's going to say that an individual taking one hour is going to use our facilities more or less than a student taking 18 hours," Matlack said.

"We try to have part-time students pay about half the amount of activity fees of a full-time student, which is $11.50," he said.

"Then we would have this atrocious gap in fees between full-time and part-time students closed up," he said.

WEIGHT REDUCTION

Looking for that little extra motivation to get started on that long-overdue diet? If so, attend one of Lafene's three weight reduction groups to start Wednesday, January 18, 1978.

The weekly sessions include a weigh-in, short discussion about dieting, and a question-and-answer period. The calorie point diet and behavior modification principles allow students to eat nutritious foods while losing one or two pounds a week. The groups will meet all semester on Wednesdays at 9:30 a.m. or 3:30 p.m. A 12:00 noon session will be held for students who have 25 or more pounds to lose while the other two sessions will be for those who would like to lose 10 or more pounds.

Introductory classes will be held Wednesday, January 18, 1978 in room 19 in the basement of Lafene Student Health Center. Students may join the group anytime during the semester. For more information, contact the Dietician or Health Educator at Lafene.

Committee selects finalists for K-State worker award

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

They come from all types of jobs and are the top third of the top one percent of the 1,800 K-State workers—they are the six finalists in K-State's "Classified Employee of the Year."

They range in appearance and personality from the physical plant employee, who admits his nickname is the "purple gopher," to the personnel services employee who finds time to do some counseling while keeping records of the 4,000 employees at K-State, to the farmer from the northwestern experimental station who warmly refers to his area as the "garden plot of Kansas," and they have been nominated K-State's first

"Classified Employee of the Year."

The idea was incorporated into an award following a committee investigation to see if there was a need for it, according to Dick Gordon, chairman of the 21-member K-State Classified Affairs Committee.

The six finalists were chosen from 85 nominees submitted by staff and faculty members.

The finalists will be honored at a ceremony scheduled for Feb. 15 when the Classified Employee of the Year will be announced.

The finalists are Gayle Bertwell, a K-State Personnel Services employee of 35 years; June Carlson, a clerk in agricultural economics for 18 years; Ralph Dreiling, animal caretaker at Fort Hays Branch Experiment Station for 26 years; Sherman Heldenbrand, physical plant employee for 31 years; Melvin Kesler, farmer with the Cornbelt Experimental Fields at Powhattan for 24 years; William Sesler, Comptrollers office employee for 21 years.

Final selection for the employee of the year will be based on various criteria, Gordon said.

"We'll re-read the letter of recommendations submitted by co-workers and supervisors to try and pick some differences in the kind of work, how they get along with fellow workers and their community activities," he said.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Drop-add forms go computerized

K-State students will use a new machine-readable drop-add form this semester, according to Douglas Hurley, assistant director of student records.

The new forms will be available from students' advisors by Wednesday. Drop-add will open in the basement of Farrell Library Thursday.

The new form was designed by Hurley to reduce the chance of error and is similar to the form used for computer-graded tests.

WITH the old system, there was a greater chance for misinterpretation due to illegible writing or incorrect line numbers Hurley said. The new system will place more responsibility on the student to get correct information on the form, he said.

Though the system is new to K-State, many other schools have been successfully using the form for some time he said.

"By fall 1978, all our data collecting will be on machine-readable forms," Hurley said.

Jeffries will oppose Keys

Jim Jeffries, an Atchison investment broker, announced his candidacy for the United States Congress at a press conference at the Wareham Hotel yesterday.

Jeffries, a Republican, will oppose Congresswoman Martha Keys in the Kansas Second Congressional District.

The major issue of Jeffries' campaign will be taxes. He said Americans are spending more on taxes than they spend on food, shelter and clothing combined.

"You are aware of the impact in everyday living," Jeffries said. "All of us are seeing our dreams fade. It is because of an increasing size of government and taxes needed to feed it."

JEFFRIES said he believes the first step toward restoring the nation's economy is to make a substantial and permanent cut in the income tax rates.

"Income tax rates can and must be cut by 30 percent. We can phase it in over a three year period," he said.

Legislation to attain this goal has been introduced in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, he said.

"If we are to get bureaucratic government off the backs and out of the pockets of the taxpayers, it will require dramatic action and bold leadership, neither of which is demonstrated by the Carter Administration or by Carter's cohort in Congress, Mrs. Keys," said Jeffries.

He added that last year, four of Keys votes cost each Kansas taxpayer an average of over $700.

Egypt, Israel open with differences

JERUSALEM (AP)—New Middle East peace talks opened Tuesday with an Egyptian demand for "an equal house for the Palestinian people" and a low-keyed Israeli call for "concession, compromise and mutual agreement."

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, staking out the middle ground, said the common goal of Egypt, Israel and the United States "and those absent today"—Jordan, Syria, and the Soviet Union—is a just, lasting and comprehensive settlement.

The strongly worded statement by Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel contrasted with the Israeli call for compromise, highlighting sharp differences between them, the legacy of the 30-year dispute.

Later, at a news conference, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan said everything is negotiable. Every Egyptian proposal including Palestinian statehood would receive consideration, he said.

"The only thing we do not accept is a kind of ultimatum—take it or leave it.

"There is no deadlock," Dayan told reporters, "but that doesn't mean we are all doing wonderfully well."

THE UNITED STATES, claiming its mantle as mediator, gave qualified support to Palestinian self-determination but also said Israel was entitled to secure borders and true peace.

The public speech-making by Kamel, Dayan and Vance, in a spacious hotel ballroom festooned with flags and floral arrangements, lasted only 17 minutes.

Afterwards, at an even briefer closed session, Egypt and Israel exchanged position papers on the Palestinian dispute and other key elements of a settlement and adjourned for the day.

Kamel declined without explanation to hold a joint news conference with Dayan and Vance.

Dayan held the conference on his own and told reporters the Israeli and Egyptian position papers showed sharp disputes. He said these main differences required study to define what "is identical, and what is not too far apart, where we can relatively easily reach agreement."

Vance, who will only remain at the talks until Friday, hailed the "courage and wisdom" of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin "in sweeping aside the barriers that for so long separated Arabs from Israelis."

Proposal going to Acker recommends lot north of Weber for dorm parking

By TIM HORAN
Collegian Reporter

A recommendation to lay gravel on an area north of Weber Hall for a temporary dormitory parking lot will be given to K-State President Duane Acker sometime this week or early next week, according to Jane Stockard, chairman of the traffic and parking council.

"At this point it's only a recommendation," she said. "It must be understood that the committee has unlimited power to recommend but it has no power to enforce."

However, if such a lot, estimated to cost $39,000, is constructed, the committee thinks it would stop dorm residents from parking on the city streets east of campus.

For several years the city has been troubled by the large number of dorm residents' cars on public streets.

Last May the problem increased and the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board, after meeting several times with the parking committee, made several recommendations to the University because of complaints from residents in the campus area who said their driveways were being used as parking lots.

Even Memorial Hospital complained because students living in Marlatt Hall who couldn't find parking spaces would park in the hospital lot.

The construction of the proposed temporary lot would give dorm students a place to park relatively close to their residences and off the city streets for just a regular dorm parking fee, Stockard said. The fee is necessary to help pay for the lot.

Stockard also said cooperation from the city was needed to force students to use such a lot.

City audit reveals no signs of fraud

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

The review of the annual audit of Manhattan's Community Development department at last night's city commission meeting showed no incontestable errors in CD's rehabilitation division records.

"We found no evidence of fraud," said Michael Rogers, a member of the accounting firm who conducted the audit.

In a statement following the report, CD Director Marvin Butler said he was guilty of no wrongdoing in the performance of his job.

"I know of no deliberate dishonesty in my handling of public funds," he said.

The audit "contains no information that casts doubts on my ability as manager" of the CD department, he said.

Butler said the errors, in part, were due to a turnover in personnel in the department during (See NO, page 2) of present U.S. officials or members of Congress.

Civiletti, chief U.S. interrogator of Park for four days, told reporters, "In all likelihood, there will be very few possible criminal cases. The few cases that do result, he added, would apply "primarily if not exclusively" to former officials and private individuals.

The Justice Department official said, however, that the testimony has been "extremely useful."

Civiletti told a news conference prior to his departure for Washington that news reports about Park's testimony in Seoul were "grossly exaggerated or widely speculative" and that there was no evidence of "certainly criminal conduct on the part of any vast number of people, either former officials or present."

Asked if he meant he expected no indictments against current congressmen, Civiletti replied, "I didn't say that, but that would be a reasonable inference from what I did say."

LAST WEEK Rep. Bruce Caputo (R-N.Y.), a member of the House Ethics Committee who attended the first two sessions of interrogation, told reporters Park admitted handing out "hundreds of thousands of dollars" to "an awful lot of people," including members of both houses of Congress.

The New York Times further reported that Park told his questioners that he gave $750,000 in (See PARK'S, page 2) covert gifts and cash payments to U.S. officials and political campaigns from 1970 to 1975.

The Times said $200,000 in cash was given to former Rep. Otto F. Passman (D-La.); $20,000 to President Nixon's 1972 re-election campaign, and $100,000 each to former Reps. Richard T. Hanna of California and Cornelius Gallagher of New Jersey, both Democrats.

Civiletti headed the interrogation of Park for four days. Five associates, under the leadership of prosecutor Paul Michel, were to continue the questioning for another seven days or so.

IN DESCRIBING Park's testimony as useful, Civiletti said he obtained direct evidence and testimony from Park "which will be helpful for evaluation and Justice Department investigation."

Civiletti said the fourth day of interrogation mainly concerned Park's rice dealings in America, where he had acted as a commission agent handling Korean purchases of American rice.

Drop-add will begin Thursday

Drop-add procedures will begin at 8:15 a.m. Thursday in the basement of Farrell Library. Students need to pick up and fill out a drop-add form from their advisors and take them to the library between 8:15 and 4:30 p.m. to obtain an appointment. Assignments will be accepted until January 30, after which the student's drop-add form must be signed by a representative from his dean's office.

ternal control (paperwork and application procedures) doesn't sound too strong."

The audit showed that there were unsigned mortgages, contracts and change orders, Rogers said.

This lack of documentation of CD expenditures caused the discrepancies between the audit and CD records and caused the department to over spend on the program.

However, Rogers did say that all the money spent was accounted for.

City Attorney Ed Horne said the prospects were good that outstanding money would be paid back by the end of the month.

Rogers said he will present the commissioners recommendations to improve the procedures for applying for CD loans and grants at the next regular city commission meeting.

Train to the rescue

HENDERSON, KY.—A freight engine and a red caboose highballed across snowbound western Kentucky Tuesday night, carrying a young man with a heart ailment to a hospital in Nashville, Tenn.

Other trains on the line were moved onto sidings to let the special train through, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad said. And in case the snowfall caused problems on the rails, the train was preceded by a hirail, a vehicle that can navigate both roads and rails.

The train—dubbed Extra 430 South—was volunteered by the L&N at the suggestion of engineer John Davis, a friend of a doctor treating ailing Keith Proctor, 17. Proctor suffers from congenital heart disease and began convulsing Monday, said the physician, Dr. Donald Cantley, as the boy was loaded onto the train here Tuesday afternoon.

Senator Bond to write

ATLANTA—Hustler magazine owner Larry Flynt is buying the Atlanta Gazette, an alternative newspaper, and has hired state Sen. Julian Bond as a contributor, it was announced Tuesday.

The newspaper purchase is Flynt's third in the past month—he has also bought The Los Angeles Free Press, also an alternative newspaper, and the Plains Monitor, the paper in President Carter's hometown.

Richard Brown, editor and publisher of the 35,000-circulation weekly, said he would retain control of the paper as editor-in-chief.

Brown described the paper as "an alternative newspaper in the mold of the Village Voice" in New York City's Greenwich Village.

Smart goat wins award

PORTLAND, ORE.—A "tin can of valor" has been awarded to Medium Rare, a 9-month-old goat who led police to two burglary suspects.

Police Chief Bruce Baker presented the goat with the special trophy Monday "for outstanding involvement in assisting the police in the apprehension of two burglars."

When police officer Robert Colyer responded to a burglary call Jan. 11, he saw three boys and what appeared to be a large dog running through woods. Colyer chased the boys but they got away.

Officers found not a dog but Medium Rare, looking into some bushes where they found one youth. A second boy was found nearby while the third was apprehended later.

Police speculated that the playful goat chased the boys, seeking companionship.

No parole for Knievel

SANTA MONICA—Berating Evel Knievel as a man guilty of "extreme cowardice," angry judge ordered the stunt man Tuesday to spend his entire six-month jail sentence behind bars with no chance of early parole.

The district attorney's office had asked that Knievel's probation be revoked because he was five hours late in returning to jail from a work-release furlough Jan. 7. Knievel, who was sentenced to six months in jail and three years probation Nov. 14 for attacking his former manager with a baseball bat, had sought immediate parole.

Knievel has said he was late because he was trying to straighten out personal problems resulting from what he said was a television commentator's inaccurate report that he was seeing a woman other than his wife during his furloughs.

Local Forecast

Today will be cloudy and cold with a 60 percent chance of precipitation today and tonight. Highs will be near 20 and the low around 5 above.

Religious order draws the eye of Postal Service

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Postal Service said Tuesday it is investigating the current practices of a Roman Catholic order whose past practices led to the indictment of its former chief fund-raiser.

"We have an open case regarding the mail practices of the Pallottine Fathers," Paul Coe, assistant chief of the Postal Inspection Service, said in an interview.

"We are taking a strong look at their current campaigns to see what they are doing with the money they are raising," Coe said.

During one 18-month period in the mid 1970s, the Pallottine Fathers of Baltimore raised $20 million with emotional appeals to help starving children abroad. An audit later showed that most of the money went to paying for the massive direct-mail campaigns and less than 3 percent of the money went to hungry children.

The past fund-raising practices led to the Jan. 6 indictment of the Rev. Guido John Carcich, the former fundraiser. The indictment includes 60 counts of misappropriation of funds and one count of obstruction of justice.

Father Carcich was removed as chief fund-raiser following the disclosures. In addition, Archbishop William Borders of the Baltimore Archdiocese termed the practices during the priest's tenure "clearly immoral."

The Pallottines say they now are raising money at the rate of $6 million per year.

A-credit-no credit should be adopted

K-State Faculty Senate should adopt the proposed A-credit-no credit grading system.

When a student earns an A in a course, he should be allowed to have the grade on his transcript.

In the proposed A-credit-no credit system, students would receive an A for A work; credit for B, C, and D work; and no credit for F work.

A-credit-no credit should be allowed in the same course areas now open to credit-no credit—namely, courses outside the student's major area of study and courses supportive to his major area of study.

THE REASONING behind the present credit-no credit system is that it will give students the academic freedom to explore areas outside of their field without the risk of a low grades appearing on their transcripts if they have difficulty with the courses.

But the present credit-no credit system has its flaws.

When a student makes the decision to take a course credit-no credit, he gives up all chance of earning a high grade.

Bright students who would normally attempt to maintain their high grades are tempted to slide through these courses with a minimum of effort and thought.

This is hardly a healthy academic trend.

THE A-CREDIT-NO CREDIT system would improve the quality of the credit-no credit system by setting a tangible goal for students to shoot for, in the event they can handle the course well.

The question was brought up at Faculty Senate on Tuesday that credits earned through the A-credit-no credit system may not be acceptable to professional post-graduate schools such as medical school or veterinary school.

This may be the case if the credit hours were in the major field of the student, such as chemistry is to a pre-med student.

But it is unlikely that a medical school would frown upon a pre-med student taking Astronomy I for A-credit-no credit.

A-credit-no credit is the next logical step in the evolution of the credit-no credit grading system.

There are those who will protest, saying that A-credit-no credit would be giving the students too much.

ON THE CONTRARY, the present credit-no credit system was controversial in that respect, but the new proposal will serve to give students a challenge that they did not have before.

Sun, snow, skiing and ego

If some of you have noticed the abundance of red cheeks on campus don't get nervous, it's not initiation time at the house.

The cheeks are sunburned because of several days of skiing in sunny Colorado. It is not uncommon for college students to go skiing over Christmas break or later over spring break—actually it is becoming quite common.

Downhill skiing has not yet totally replaced Florida or the Padre Islands as the typical American college student's winter hang-out, but is rapidly doing so.

Seriously, when was the last time Annette Funicello went to where the boys are to fall in love with Franki Avalon.

And we know Elvis Presley isn't going to be falling in love with anyone on a Florida beach for a very long time.

The alternative? I predict before 1980 we will be seeing Shaun Cassidy hotdogging it down the slopes of Aspen only to get lost in the mountains with and spend the night in a cabin with Diane Keaton on the CBS Late Movie.

ALL SERIOUSNESS ASIDE, ever since the government quit its "two-year-all-expenses-paid vacation in Saigon" and the Claudine Longet School of Ski Instruction went out of business when it could not pay its insurance premiums, college students have been massing to Colorado.

The students, those from K-State certainly not withstanding, go to colorful Colorado in any way they can. Students are traveling in everything from their daddy's airplane to their roommate's friend's cousin's '56 Volkswagen.

Most room accommodations fall into one of two categories: either packing six to nine people in a one or two bedroom condominium or crashing on a friend's or relative's livingroom floor.

Condominiums tend to be somewhat expensive; ranging from $50 to $100 per day, but if split between 16 people, can be as low as $3.13 each per day.

NOT INCLUDING LIQUOR, a student's highest single expense in a skiing trip is the lift ticket. For $9 to $14 per day, a ski resort will give you the privilege of making idle conversation with a 28-year-old spinster secretary from Toledo on a very-cold metal chair hanging 50 feet above a rocky mountain slope from a cable that looks very thin. Something like:

"Hi."

"Yeah."
"Nice weather"
"Yeah."
"Geez, you're homely."
"Yeah."
"Is this your first time skiing?"
"Yeah."

YOU GET A MEDAL for a day on the ski lift. Or at least sort of a medal—that paper tag that some people like to leave on their jacket until the following October is actually a subtle hint alluding to, "HEY! LOOK AT ME! I WENT SKIING!"

One of the true joys of going downhill is watching the snow bunnies. Snow bunnies are attractive women (at least a seven and a half) who hang around the lodge in their $200 coordinated ski suits.

Sometimes they know how to ski, sometimes they don't.

Certainly not being one to fall into the sexist columnist category stereotype, I must concede that hotdoggers exist as a male counterpart to the snow bunny.

HOTDOGGERS also flaunt their bodies in $200 coordinated ski suits, but spend most of their time skiing backwards on one ski in the inverted swan position underneath the ski lifts putting on a truly impressive show, particularly when they don't see a tree coming.

Once you finally make it to the slope keep an eye out for rocks, cliffs and trees—but the real danger is those damn four-year-old kids. Their coordinated ski suits only cost $125 because the kids are only three foot nothing.

Those kids (and there are thousands of them) have an incredible talent for being able to ski 60 miles per hour between your legs.

AT SOME SLOPES, the kids are commissioned by local hospitals to produce accident victims (broken legs a specialty) out of what once were vacationing skiers.

Skiers in Colorado come from all over the United States and Texas. Colorado natives have not been real crazy about Texans ever since some oil millionaire tried to buy Colorado for a Texas state park.

Actually, the prevailing sentiment was best summed up in a quote on a men's room wall somewhere in the Rocky Mountains which said:

"If God had wanted Texans to ski, he would have made bulls-t white."

Arab leaders offer to buy land for Palestinian state

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—King Khaled and Crown Prince Fahd of oil-rich Saudi Arabia have offered to buy the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip from Israel to establish a Palestinian state, an Arab publication said Tuesday.

The Saudi leaders made the offer to President Carter during his visit earlier this month to Saudi Arabia, the world's leading oil exporter, according to the Middle East Reporter, a usually well-informed daily digest of Arab affairs.

"The Saudis made it plain to the American president they are prepared to pay as much as required to establish a homeland for the Palestinian nation, even if that means buying the West Bank and Gaza from Israel," the publication said.

It quoted Khaled and Fahd as telling Carter: "You try to solve the Palestinian problem and we are ready to give you all the oil you want."

In Washington, White House press secretary Jody Powell, who attended some of the meetings between U.S. and Saudi officials, said he was unaware of any such offer.

"I heard neither King Khaled nor Prince Fahd make such a statement," Powell said.

STATE Department spokesman John Trattner said "our policy is not to comment on details of private conversations between the president and the Saudis. I personally see no validity to it but I can't go into details."

The Arab publication also said the Saudi leaders told Carter they would raise their country's oil production to "any possibly feasible level" if it would bring about the establishment of a Palestinian state.

The publication attributed its report to reliable travelers it said arrived in Beirut from Saudi Arabia on Monday, but it did not name them.

It said the travelers quoted Saudi officials as saying the "worst crisis in the history of Saudi-American relations" has developed because the United States and Saudi Arabia are so far apart in their positions for a Middle East peace settlement.

The publication said the Saudis rejected Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Bevin's offer of limited autonomy for the 1.1 million Palestinians living on the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, regions occupied by Israel since June 1967.

Business exceeds labor in political campaign spending

WASHINGTON (AP)—For the first time in the five years that records have been kept, business political committees in 1977 gave more to congressional candidates than did labor, according to a new study by Common Cause.

Despite the limited number of elections last year, special interest groups managed to invest $2.4 million in the candidates of their choice during the first 10 months of 1977.

For this period, corporate or trade association political action committees contributed $987,000 to political candidates compared to $844,000 from labor groups.

Common Cause, a citizens group that specializes in monitoring government, also released figures showing business nearly tripled its political gifts and almost caught labor in 1976, the last full-scale election year.

The Common Cause figures released Tuesday showed business committees contributed more than $7.1 million to congressional candidates in 1976, up from the $2.5 million they gave in the 1974 congressional year.

Labor gifts in 1976 were $8.2 million, up about $2 million over 1974.

Despite the business surge in 1977, the largest single contributors came from agricultural and professional committees. Dairy-related committees gave a total of $104,561, just a few dollars ahead of the American Medical Association's $104,499.

Bill limiting underground water use joins list of issues before the senate

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill introduced in the Kansas Senate Tuesday would require that the state issue its grants for underground water rights only to persons engaged in agricultural pursuits and owning 10 or more acres of land.

If the bill were to become law, it would mean persons wanting water for commercial and industrial use in rural areas would have to purchase water from someone who had the rights to it.

The requirement contained in the measure, offered by the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, would become effective July 1.

The bill was among 20 received in the Senate and House on the seventh day of the session, as both houses met briefly and the more interesting activity came in committee actions.

The House took it easy, girding for Wednesday morning when the first major debate of the session in either chamber will dominate. The House is scheduled to debate reinstitution of capital punishment. The death penalty bill is given a better chance of winning approval in the House than in the Senate.

AMONG HOUSE bills received Tuesday was one offered by Rep. Charles Laird (D-Topeka), which would provide parents of college students with $100 tax credit for college tuition.

Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains), chairman of the committee, said the purpose of the water rights bill is to put a stop to what he said has become a common practice.

That is for a person to obtain a state grant to the water rights on land, then subdivide the land, build houses on it and supply the housing development with the water. Such practice overdraws the water rights, Angell said.

Another bill offered by Angell's committee would permit the boards of groundwater management districts to base their water charges on a flat rate rather than water usage. Angell said the change is needed to help the districts in their budgeting process. As it is now, he said, they can't fund their budgets in wet years when water usage is down.

SENATE PRESIDENT Ross Doyen was among five senators of both parties offering a bill which would require the state Board of Education to establish a standardized system of fiscal, accounting and reporting procedures for state community junior colleges.

Sens. James Francisco of Wichita and William Mulich of Kansas City, two Democrats, introduced a bill which would prohibit school districts from requiring students to take classes in sex education if their parents or guardians objected in writing.

Three other Democrats, Bert Chaney of Hutchinson, Don Allegrucci of Pittsburg and Frank Smith of Olathe, offered a bill prohibiting employers from asking prospective employees to disclose whether they've ever received treatment for mental or emotional disorders, except in certain instances.

Kansas Court asked to ban insurance law

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas Supreme Court was asked Tuesday to declare the state medical malpractice insurance law unconstitutional because it requires doctor to buy coverage whether they want it or not.

Michael Holland, a Russell attorney, appealed to the high court from a decision barring Dr. Byron Liggett of Great Bend from practicing medicine until he buys malpractice insurance. Holland said the state requirement abridges the freedom of doctors.

"What is happening is this—how far can state police power go to protect individual rights," Holland said.

He told the high court the requirement infringes on the rights of doctors who don't want to buy malpractice insurance and doesn't apply equally to all health care providers.

AIB sees possible link with K-State as ranks swell for graduate courses

By NORMAN PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

The American Institute of Baking, (AIB), which began its educational programs January 9, may use some K-State facilities for its classroom activities.

The institute is a research and educational facility serving the baking industry, located north of campus on Manhattan Avenue.

Darrell Brensing, AIB director of education, said he hopes AIB will be able to make arrangements with K-State to share some facilities. In return, he said, some K-State graduate students would be eligible to take AIB courses.

"If we have a class of 200, we would like to rent one of the University's lecture halls," Brensing said. "Also, K-State graduate students would be able to take a course from AIB during intersession."

THE institute uses K-State professors from the departments of baking, grain, milling, dairy and poultry science as regular speakers in AIB classes, Brensing said.

Between 600 and 1,000 people are expected to enroll at the institute, which offers two 20-week courses and several two-week courses.

Tips pay off in photos

The Collegian will award one free 8x10 and two 5x7 photographs each week to the student, faculty, staff member or Manhattan resident who submits the best spot news tip of the week.

Feature or news tips should be dropped off at the Collegian newsroom, Kedzie 116 or phoned in at 532-6555.

Anything which might make an interesting story or photograph is welcome.

Photographs will be taken and processed by Collegian photographers and may be of yourself or friends for portfolios, resumes or scrapbooks.

Course topics range from maintenance and operation of baking equipment to baking science and technology, Brensing said.

"All students are expected to know the basics before coming to AIB," Brensing said. "Bakers with a couple years experience, graduates of K-State or similar degree programs—such as trade schools—or graduates of AIB's correspondence courses are eligible."

BESIDES courses offered the Manhattan facility, members of the AIB staff travel around the United States conducting various seminars on baking, Brensing said.

"We can also tailor a course for an individual company and give that seminar to their employees," he said.

Although education is the major emphasis of the AIB, the institute also offers sanitation inspections and conducts baking research.

"We inspect 1,500 (baking) plants yearly," Brensing said. "We have no regulatory control but are a private concern of the baking industry, supported by memberships, endowments and fees."

AIB inspections consist of going through a plant with the plant's management and advising them on maintaining plant sanitation, Brensing said.

Research done by the AIB is usually conducted for baking and cereal companies which lack the trained personnel, specialized equipment or finances to do their own research, he said.

"AIB is the only institute of its kind in the world to offer such a wide range of services," Brensing said.

Brensing predicts that more baking industries will set up facilities in the Manhattan area in the next five years.

"No where else in the world is there the concentration of expertise in baking and related areas as in Manhattan," he said.

Another courtyard cashier: Union to add 'Zip' machine

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

A new banking machine will soon be operating in the K-State Union allowing holders of a Zip card to perform banking transactions in the Union.

Kansas State Bank of Manhattan is sponsoring the installation of a machine which will accept Zip cards from that bank as well as any other bank in the state issuing the Zip card.

This is the second banking machine to locate in the Union. Both machines are in the courtyard on the ground floor of the Union.

THE facility will allow people to make deposits, withdrawals, transactions from saving to checking accounts (and vice versa), loan payments, find their balance on checking accounts and send messages to any bank personnel, said Rick Mann, vice president of Kansas State Bank.

"I'm not sure when it's going to be up and running," Mann said. "It may be another seven days or somewhere along the 25th (of January)."

Walt Smith, director of the Union, said he favors the machine installment because students will be able to make banking transactions after 5 p.m. or on weekends.

"Even though these (the Kansas State Bank facility and the First National Bank facility) are the first outside agencies to operate within the Union, we felt their service would really be helpful to the K-State students or we wouldn't have them in here in the first place," Smith said.

"The only reason we did this was to try to relieve our check-cashing service. It's better for students and faster, too. We hope to reduce employees from two to one in about two years from now."

SMITH stated that he had been thinking about the bank machine installment a little more than a year ago in conjunction with other bank services.

Mann said that the Zip cards are made locally. There is no charge for the cards themselves, he said. "The only charge is when one makes a withdrawal depending upon the type of checking account he has," he said.

After customers are issued a card, one of the bank employees shows them how the computer operates.

"There might be a reluctance to use the machine unless they are shown how," Mann said.

Mann said security for individual Zip cards is "very good." The customer's checking account and identification numbers are secret, he said.

While Mann and Smith said they enjoy the convenience, speed and location of the bank facilities, others don't see any real purpose for banks in the Union.

"The only advantage I see is slight," said Gary Clift, graduate instructor in English. "Students will save time when cashing checks, but it (the system) will not keep the Union from taking bad checks. Also, it's going to cut down on hours of the employees, and I'd hate to see that happen."

Military moves nerve gas kits for destruction

DENVER (AP)—Rifle-carrying soldiers, gas masks on the hips, stood guard Tuesday as 350 obsolete chemical warfare-training kits were unloaded at Denver's Stapleton International Airport.

The kits, containing small quantities of nerve gas and other deadly agents, were taken by truck convoy to the Rocky Mountain Arsenal, which abuts the airport.

The training kits, shipped from Hawaii, were the first of about 1,700 that will be shipped to the arsenal in the next 10 days from military bases in nine states and Guam.

They will be destroyed at the arsenal in a pilot disposal program. U.S. military services now have about 19,800 of the kits in storage.

"Everything went beautifully," said Art Whitney, an arsenal spokesman. "It was well organized and they are now in the storage area."

Faculty Senate plans study of A-credit-no credit options

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor
and MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

A motion to appoint a special committee to study the credit-no credit academic system was passed Tuesday by Faculty Senate during discussion of an A-credit-no credit proposal.

The motion to create the special

Pratt man hired for assistant city manager position

James Pearson, 35, of Pratt, Ks. was named Manhattan's assistant city manager Tuesday by acting City Manager Les Rieger.

Pearson will begin work for the city Jan. 30 earning $21,000 per year.

Pearson served as Pratt city manager for four and one-half years and assistant city manager in Great Bend for two and one-half years.

HE said he believes his transition to Manhattan's staff will be smooth.

"I have experience as assistant city manager and I'm familiar with the frustrations (of city manager) and the need for an assistant city manager," he said.

All Kansas cities are "fairly standard because they all work under the same set of laws," he said. But each town has its own unique aspect.

"There are no heavy, dirty industries" in Manhattan, he said, which adds to the personality of the town.

Pearson graduated from Ft. Hays State University in 1970 with a bachelors degree in political science. He attended Colorado State University for one year as an independent researcher for the National Science Foundation.

committee was made after faculty senators debated the merits of the proposal and aspects of the credit-no credit system.

"The credit-no credit system allows the student to explore areas not associated with his major, said Heinz Bulmahn, arts and sciences senator.

"The minute you introduce A-credit-no credit, it becomes a graded credit-no credit system and destroys the basic notion of credit-no credit," Bulmahn said.

"A-credit-no credit is a positive—and I emphasize the positive aspect—motivation for those who want it," said Pat Sargent, student senate representative to faculty senate.

"For instance, if a student finds himself doing well at the beginning and won't have anything to show for it, he may end up slipping down to a B, C or D level," Sargent said.

"You can't have it both ways," said Vince Gillespie, arts and sciences senator.

"If you want a credit-no credit, then opt for that. If you want an A to an F, then opt for that. You can't have all worlds at once."

A PROPOSAL for an A-credit-no credit system, which would give an A for A work, credit for B, C or D work and no credit for F work, was passed overwhelmingly by Student Senate.

Low prices force farmers to seek off-the-farm jobs

By NORMAN PRATHER
Collegian Reporter

Twenty-four hours is not enough. At least that is the claim of many Kansas farmers who are forced to work at part-time jobs because of low farm prices.

"There is no way to make money farming. You don't have time to do a full job of farming with a sideline job," said Gerald Welch, Anderson County farmer.

According to a report by Frank Orazem, K-State agricultural economics professor, and Hans Gammenthaler, K-State graduate in agricultural economics, net on-farm income dropped from $9,826 in 1974 to $8,079 in 1975.

"We've been holding on for three years. I don't know if we can hold on for three more," LaNelle Welch said.

WELCH'S son Dan agreed with his father saying they need their lime and hay hauling business to supplement their farm income.

"We run a lime spreading truck and a hay hauling truck and can barely make it if we can sell the hay we bale. I wouldn't have even tried to farm after graduating from high school if I didn't have Dad's help.

"Most of our machinery is old and worn out but we can't afford to replace it. I could work off-farm in the winter but not in the summer, there's just not enough time," the younger Welch said.

The 1974 Census of Agriculture shows that over 20,000 Kansas farmers do some work off the farm and 16,970 of those spent 200 or more days working off the farm.

ANDERSON County Agriculture Extension Agent Maurice Harrington said he estimates the number of farmers moonlighting in his area has doubled in the last ten years.

"There are many more farmers working off-farm because of the farm situation, they either have to re-finance loans or find part-time jobs to maintain the lifestyle they have become used to," James Lindquist, Riley County agriculture extension agent said.

The actual number of farmers working off the farm varies according to the opportunities in the area.

"Fewer farmers are working off-farm in Anderson County than in the more industrial areas of the state because there are fewer opportunities in this area," Harrington said.

Bob Ames, vice-president in charge of agricultural finance at the Humboldt National Bank, said he estimates that only two farmers working with his bank are doing off the farm work.

NEARLY half the farmers doing business with the Merchants National Bank in Topeka hold part-time off the farm jobs, according to Wilbur Levering, senior vice-president in charge of correspondent banks. The reason given by both men was the difference in the amount of industry in the two areas.

Farm bankers opinions are divided on how moonlighting affects a farmer's efficiency.

"The farmer has extra income and is more enthused about farming, however, he must regulate his farming to fit his job schedule," Joe Bailly, president of the Garnett State Bank said.

He said he believes that an off the farm job can improve farm efficiency.

Ames said he doesn't think part-time farming hurts farm efficiency, however "I don't see how they can physically stand the strain," Ames said.

"If a farmer tries to hold a part-time job his efficiency as a farmer is going to be impaired, there is only one time when the weather is just right to plant or harvest and he may not be able to farm that day because of his part-time commitment," Ray Pershall, president of the Allan County State Bank and Trust said.

"You can't do a good job farming if you have to work another job part-time," said Clayton Erhart, a farmer from Eastern Kansas.

"If farmers try to work a part-time job and farm at the same time, he usually ends up not doing a good job of either," said Jerry Leuthi, a Riley County farmer.

Farmers need to learn to keep costs down according to Marvin Clark, member of "Kansas Farmers" Foresight panel, a monthly feature in the magazine.

"We are in a low price period, farmers need to work on keeping prices down. If they can, then the farmer will survive," Clark said.

"There was a time when almost any money a farmer spent made him money. Now we have a point of diminishing returns," he said.

K-State goes to reserves to meet new wage law

By DENNIS BOONE
Managing Editor

In order to comply with the government's increase in minimum wage for more than 1,100 students employed on campus, K-State has placed itself on a $48,000 limb.

According to Daniel Beatty, vice president of business affairs, the University has already enacted the 35 cent per hour pay increase to $2.65 an hour without having funds set aside to do so.

"We're acting as if we're going to get the increase approved by the (Kansas) Legislature, at least for this year," Beatty said. "We have already made the adjustment for those student employees who were receiving less than the new minimum wage, which will amount to about $48,000 this semester."

BEATTY said a supplementary request had been put before the legislature to cover the added expense of the minimum wage increase. But until the money is approved and meted out, the University is shelling out of its own pocket.

"We have a small University reserve fund for equipment and services set aside," Beatty said. "And at the moment, the money is coming out of that. However, if we don't get the increase, we'll be out that much in equipment and services next year. We hope to get it back from the supplemental."

NOT only will the University have to meet the wage requirements this year, but next year, when the minimum wage jumps to $2.90 per hour.

"At this time we anticipate the $48,000 to cover the remainder of this fiscal year, or through June 30. On July 1, we will still be meeting the $2.65 requirements, but when those go up again to $2.90, we'll need a total of $81,000 to cover for that fiscal year," Beatty said.

Beatty said the University is optimistic in its chances of receiving additional monies from the state legislature to cover the wage increases.

"If we weren't optimistic, we wouldn't have made the move to make these adjustments," he said.

BUT on the chance that the legislature fails to give its approval to the supplementary increases, Beatty said an evaluation of services provided by student employees would be made.

We would take a review of our position to find out where we're at, and make appropriate adjustments in our budget next year," Beatty said.

However, a cutback in services provided by the 1,150 student employees—or a reduction in the number of employees—is unlikely, for either of the two years, Beatty said.

Blacks against tax cut

WASHINGTON (AP)—The National Urban League, describing the state of black America as grim, said Tuesday that the broad tax cut proposal being readied by President Carter is unwise, and would not benefit blacks or the nation's troubled cities.

Any reduction in federal revenues would "become an excuse for not implementing vitally needed urban and social programs," said Vernon Jordan, director of the moderate civil rights group.

Though his statement was not so harsh as the criticism he leveled at Carter last July, when he said many blacks felt "betrayed" by the president, Jordan made it clear that he is dissatisfied with early reports on the president's tax reform and urban policy plans.

HIS remarks indicated Carter can expect vocal opposition from black leaders if they think the administration's upcoming tax and urban proposals do not benefit blacks and the cities sufficiently.

There was no immediate reaction from the White House.

In the league's third annual "State of Black America" report, Jordan said: "1977 was a year of continued depression, with unacceptably high unemployment and a widening income gap. Most Americans consider that 1977 was a year of economic recovery. We cannot share that view."

He told reporters, "Unemployment is an urgent and serious problem in the black community." Asked about President Carter's job policies, Jordan replied, "We are disappointed."

"The state of Black America is grim, and we expect the president to be responsive to those needs," said Jordan.

Jordan listed four main priorities for the civil rights community: The tax cut proposal, the administration's upcoming national urban policy, full employment legislation now before Congress, and passage of a welfare reform package.

KSU Stadium needs new turf

JIM GIBBONS
Collegian Reporter

The nine-year-old astroturf in KSU Stadium is wearing out and will have to be replaced by the end of the 1978 football season, according to Athletic Director Jersey Jermier.

However, Jermier said the athletic department doesn't know how funds will be raised to pay for the new surface.

"The present surface is not dangerous, yet," he said. But he did say repair work has been necessary to keep the field in good playing condition.

Jermier said the cost of new Astroturf on today's market would be $225,000. But he expects that figure to rise by the time the surface is installed.

Sports

Alternatives to Astroturf are Superturf, an artificial surface similar to Astroturf, and natural grass. The cost of Superturf would be comparable to Astroturf while natural grass would have an initial cost of $175,000.

But Jermier said the advantages of Astroturf made it preferable to grass. He said that the present surface, the shock pad underneath, and the asphalt underneath that, would all have to be removed if grass is used.

Then new dirt would have to be hauled in and the field reseeded.

And, Jermier said, new people would have to be hired to maintain the grass field.

"We've been happy with the present surface," Jermier said, "and the players prefer Astroturf. It's faster, the traction is better and you don't get the sloppy conditions like you do with grass."

"Also, we have to consider that most of our away games are played on Astroturf," Jermier said. "This year the only game we played on grass was at Missouri. It's very tough for a team to play on Astroturf when they've been practicing on grass."

Jermier also said that a method would have to be devised to fund the new surface since there are no present funds available.

"First, the Intercollegiate Athletic Council, chaired by Allison Luthi, must decide if a change is necessary," Jermier said. "Then we'll decide how to raise the money."

"We may be able to raise $20,000 to $30,000 by selling the present surface," Jermier said. "It'll either be sold to a merchant or cut up and sold as momentos."

Monsanto, which makes Astroturf, would handle all removal and installation, Jermier said. The life expectancy of the new surface would be nine to 10 years.

Roundballers set to start

The intramural basketball season begins next week with a new division. The recreational division is set up for those who wish to compete on a game by game basis.

In this division, there will be no points tabulated, win-loss record, awards, or playoffs. Along with this addition are the regular divisions available for participants: fraternity, independent, residence hall, women and co-rec.

Anyone entering a basketball or water basketball team should plan to attend the managers meeting which has been rescheduled for 4 p.m. Thursday, Jan. 19 in Forum Hall.

Basketball officials are still needed, said Bill Harms, associate director of recreational services. A meeting for officials will be held Friday, Jan. 20, at 4 p.m. in Forum Hall.

Doctor J leads vote-getters in NBA All-Star balloting

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Walton and Maurice Lucas, the power duo of Portland's defending champions, were named to the West team, while dazzling Julius Erving of the East was the leading vote-getter for the National Basketball Association All-Star game in balloting announced Tuesday.

Lucas, the Trail Blazers' devastating forward, and Walton, Portland's smooth center, will head the West's starting lineup that also will include veteran forward Rick Barry of the Golden State Warriors and guards David Thompson of the Denver Nuggets and Paul Westphal of the Phoenix Suns.

Erving, winner of the Most Valuable Player award in last season's game, won by the West 125-124, will lead the East's starting five, which also will have Larry Kenon of the San Antonio Spurs at forward, Dave Cowens of the Boston Celtics at center, and Pete Maravich of the New Orleans Jazz and George Gervin of San Antonio at guards.

EACH team will have six other players, to be picked by the 11 coaches in both the Eastern and Western conferences.

Jack Ramsay of Portland, whose Trail Blazers have the best record in the West, and Billy Cunningham, who replaced Gene Shue at Philadelphia early in the season and has directed the 76ers to the East's top winning percentage, will be the coaches for the 28th NBA All-Star game, to be played Feb. 5 at the Omni in Atlanta. The East leads the series 17-10.

A record 1,397,272 fans in the league's 22 cities participated in the balloting, and Erving, in his second year in the league after an outstanding career in the American Basketball Association, received 396,503 votes in earning his second starting assignment.

OSU looks to derail 'Cats winning track

The K-State men's basketball team, looking to remain on the winning track, will host the Oklahoma State Cowboys tonight at 7:35 in Ahearn Field House.

Tonights game marks the 60th meeting between the two schools with K-State leading the series 48-11. The 'Cats have also claimed the last 14 encounters against the Cowboys dating back to 1971. Wildcat Head Coach Jack Hartman holds a 15-1 record against his alma mater.

Oklahoma State, coming off an 85-70 loss to Missouri, brings a 6-8 overall and 0-3 Big Eight record into tonight's game. K-State, following its 68-52 victory over Colorado, sports a 10-5 overall record and stands 1-2 in conference play.

THE COWBOYS, playing under first year coach Jim Killingsworth, are led by senior forwards 6-6 Olus Holder and 6-7 Eli Johnson and 6-4 junior guard Mark Tucker. Holder is averaging 16.6 points pr game while Tucker is averaging 15 and Johnson 13.9.

In addition to Holder's scoring capabilities he leads the Cowboys in rebounding and ranks second in the Big Eight in that category with a 10.4 per game average. Other probable starters for the Cowboys are 6-7 senior center Andrew Jones and 6-2 freshman guard Randy Wright.

K-State will be led by the dependable duo of Curtis Redding and Mike Evans. Redding who is averaging 22.9 points a game ranks second in the Big Eight in scoring, while Evans, averaging 20 points a game ranks third.

The K-State junior varsity, which suffered its first loss of the season Saturday afternoon to Hughes Conoco of Topeka will also be in action tonight in a 5:15 preliminary game in Ahearn against Colby Community College.

Not surprising. The Savin 770 plain paper copier is the most reliable machine on the market. It's practically jam proof. That's because of our simple paper path. The shorter the distance travelled, the less chance for jam ups. Our copies move a mere twelve inches from beginning to end. In some Xerox machines a copy is forced to twist and turn over four feet, very often ending up in the middle.

Another reason so many people switch off Xerox and on to Savin is the copy itself. Ours are always clear, clean and needle sharp, regardless of the original, whether you copy on to one side or two. That's because the Savin 770 has a mind. An electronic brain reads every original first and makes whatever adjustments are necessary to give perfect copies every time.

The Great Race

The Great American Speed Race. Many of you practiced this sport on your way back to school this week.

On the interstate, it's when you drive with one eye on the speedometer that says 65 or 70 mph and the other eye on the oncoming lane, watching for the highway patrol.

Out west (of Highway 81) that's when you hit 90 mph or above on those stretches where you know nothing but a stray cow or two can get hurt.

JUST THE other day I got into a bull session (as we college students are prone to do) on this very subject. The other participants were two friends of mine, Clint from western Kansas and Casey from K.C.

Casey is a sophomore in mechanical engineering from Overland Park. He drives a 1964 American Rambler that features a three-on-the-tree transmission. It's loaded with options like a radio, a heater and 4-55 air conditioning.

"She'll do exactly 67 mph downhill with a tailwind and a 'semi' right behind me," Casey said of his car's top speed. Casey gets 15 miles to the gallon on good days.

Casey said there is an energy crisis, but "I ain't gonna worry about it. I'll be gone before it kills me."

"I think we're being reamed by the Arab countries," he said.

OF HIS own efforts to conserve energy, Casey said, "I turn off my electric blanket every morning." He also tries to turn off the lights and his stereo whenever they aren't in use.

"I did have a Christmas tree with lights on it, though," he said.

Commenting on his driving habits, Casey said, "I don't buy much gas. It don't take much. That's because I drive a 14-year old six-banger.

"I'm always within 20 miles of the speed limit," Casey said.

"Fifty-five's too slow. It gets monotonous. Sixty-five speeds up your heartbeat when you dodge the cops."

CLINT is a senior in architecture from Tribune (that's about as far west as you can get without being from Colorado). Clint drives a 1970 Boss 302 Mustang that has a top speed of 135.

"It breathes a little better," Clint said of the cam, headers, manifold, carburetor and head work he's added to his fire breather since he bought it. Clint said he gets a "respectable" 13 miles to the gallon on the highway.

"There isn't an energy crisis," he said. "The oil companies are just working us over. I don't even turn my electric blanket off," Clint said.

"I drive faster than the posted speed limit. I've never driven the posted speed limit," he said.

CLINT SAID he averages 85 to 90 mph on the highway because "I'm always in a hurry."

And how will the growing energy crisis affect Clint's life in the future? "If it happens, it would. I guess," he said.

Ali 'tight-lipped' on birthday

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Once bombastic Muhammad Ali went into a Garbo-like "I want to be alone" shell Tuesday and tossed a damp blanket over a party celebrating his 36th birthday.

"I don't want to talk to nobody," the heavyweight ring champion insisted after a battery of newsmen, flown in from such sites as New York, Toronto and San Francisco, descended on Chris Dundee's old Fifth Avenue gym in Miami Beach, where Ali began his pro career 17 years ago.

He sat in his dressing room and sulked while reporters and cameramen waited impatiently outside.

Dour and tight-lipped, the champion emerged after a 27 minute delay, then stood by glumly while Miami Beach Mayor Leonard Haber presented him with a gold key to the city and an honorary police badge.

TOP RANK, INC., sponsors of Ali's Feb. 15 title defense against Leon Spinks in Las Vegas, Nev., produced a 3x2 foot birthday cake with a gleaming crown and red boxing gloves made of marzipan.

Publicist Irving Rudd read a glowing tribute from Vice President Walter Mondale and apologized that a letter from President Carter had been misdirected to Ali's home in Chicago.

Ali obligingly cut the cake while a small group of ringsiders cheered. Then, looking overweight and slow, he sparred five rounds with former Golden Gloves champion Mike Doaks.

Doaks battered the champ around the ring until the final round when, after both fighters had doffed their protective head gear, Ali for the first time showed a trace of his former brilliance.

"He's whupped me every day, but today I danced," Muhammad said almost inaudibly to his trainer, Angelo Dundee.

Market rallies; dollar stronger

NEW YORK (AP)—The stock market, heartened by a firmer dollar on world money markets, staged its strongest rally of the year Tuesday as stock prices pushed upward across a broad front.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks, which before Tuesday's trading had fallen nearly 60 points in 1978, climbed 7.28 to close at 779.02.

Advances outnumbered declines by about a 2-1 margin on the New York Stock Exchange.

Volume on the New York Exchange was 19.36 million shares, a slight increase from Monday's level of 18.76 million.

WEIGHT REDUCTION

Looking for that little extra motivation to get started on that long-overdue diet? If so, attend one of Lafene's three weight reduction groups to start Wednesday, January 18, 1978.

The weekly sessions include a weigh-in, short discussion about dieting, and a question-and-answer period. The calorie point diet and behavior modification principles allow students to eat nutritious foods while losing one or two pounds a week. The groups will meet all semester on Wednesdays at 9:30 a.m. or 3:30 p.m. A 12:00 noon session will be held for students who have 25 or more pounds to lose while the other two sessions will be for those who would like to lose 10 or more pounds.

Introductory classes will be held Wednesday, January 18, 1978 in room 19 in the basement of Lafene Student Health Center. Students may join the group anytime during the semester. For more information, contact the Dietician or Health Educator at Lafene.

NOTICE TO ALL STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF

The Recreational Services Council recently made a change in policy allowing faculty and staff (including graduate assistants) only in the gymnasium over the noon hour (11:30-12:30) Monday through Friday. This will be on a trial basis this semester January 18 through March 15, 1978, and will be reviewed at that time as to its utilization.

Formerly the noon hour was set aside for faculty only, allowing students to use the noon hour if faculty programs were not hampered. Recognizing this and upon request by faculty and staff to honor this past agreement, the Recreational Services Council has re-instituted the original policy and will allow only faculty and staff to use the gym from 11:30 a.m. until 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. The fieldhouse, weight room, and pools will still be open for student participation over the noon hour.

Your cooperation in implementing this policy will be greatly appreciated, and should you have any questions or concerns, please discuss these with me in the Recreational Services Office.

Sadat pulls Egypt from peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP)—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat broke off talks with Israel on Wednesday, called his foreign minister back to Cairo and accused the Israelis of deliberately blocking progress toward a Middle East Peace.

The sudden move by the Egyptian leader cast a pall over the future of the negotiations, which began at Sadat's initiative in November.

President Carter telephoned Sadat less than four hours after the breakdown in the talks and Sadat told him the negotiations could resume if Israel changed its position.

A statement read over Egyptian television said Carter asked if it would be possible to continue the talks for a day or two, apparently to give Secretary of State Cyrus Vance a chance to patch things up. The statement said Sadat told Carter: "Israel wants land and not peace, which makes the negotiations useless."

An Israeli Cabinet statement charged that Egypt had "deluded itself" into thinking it could "force upon Israel" its terms for a Mideast settlement, and accused Egypt of "astonishing rigidity" in the bargaining.

VANCE, who has been attempting to bridge the gaps between Israel and Egypt in private talks with the negotiators, told reporters he does not believe the talks have reached an end.

"I've been through a lot of international negotiations," he said. "I've seen ups and downs in the past."

The Egyptian announcement caught Vance by surprise. He was planning a dinner Wednesday night for Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel.

"It will be for the president to decide what and how the next stage will take place," Kamel said after a 90-minute meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

"The atmosphere which surrounded the meetings of the political committee and the political statements and things like that had something to do with my recall," he said.

ISRAELI Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, standing by Kamel after the meeting, said: "I'm very sorry about President Sadat's decision."

Dayan said he was certain that "in a not long time we will find ways to resume negotiations."

The statement on Egyptian television did not say whether Carter had promised to try to get Israel to change its negotiating position. But the statement said Carter persuaded Sadat to cancel a decree ordering that military talks between Egypt in Israel, set for Thursday in Cairo, be suspended.

It was the first official word that Sadat had planned to cut off direct contact with the Israelis entirely, although there was speculation to that effect after Kamel's recall.

Those talks will reconvene Saturday, the statement said.

THE TALKS between the Israeli and Egyptian foreign ministers, the highest level negotiations between the two countries so far, began Tuesday and soon were deeply divided over Palestinian rights to a homeland and Israel's 11-year occupation of Arab lands.

Sawry said Sadat ordered Kamel to return "immediately" because "it became apparent from the declarations of Israeli leaders that Israel insists on presenting partial solutions that cannot lead to the establishment of a just and lasting peace."

Carter picks St. Louis judge as FBI director nominee

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter has chosen U.S. Circuit Judge William Webster to be the next FBI director, administration sources said Wednesday night.

Webster, 53, of St. Louis won a strong recommendation from Attorney General Griffin Bell and Carter agreed with Bell's choice, the sources said. The White House was expected to make the formal announcement Thursday.

Webster must win Senate confirmation before taking over the FBI from Director Clarence Kelley, who is scheduled to retire Feb. 15.

The choice of the Missouri judge and former federal prosecutor ends the administration's year-long search for an FBI chief willing to serve a 10-year term, the maximum permitted by law.

BELL had insisted on a 10-year commitment to provide the bureau with continuity in leadership as it continues major changes in its operations and recovers from disclosures of past wrongdoing.

In St. Louis, Webster said he had not been notified of the appointment.

"I only know what I've heard over the radio. I plan to go to work tomorrow," he said.

Webster's friends and professional colleagues described him as intelligent, fair-minded and witty. They said he plays an intense game of tennis and that he's more moderate in his politics and philosophy than his short haircut and conservative style of dress would suggest.

A Republican, he dabbled in Missouri party politics several years ago, but has refrained from political activities since he was appointed a federal district judge in 1971 by then-President Richard Nixon.

TWO years later, Nixon promoted him to the 8th Circuit Court of Appeals which handles cases from several midwestern states.

The President and Bell chose Webster over U.S. District Judge Frank McGarr of Chicago. Bell had narrowed the field to those two after Carter's first nominee, U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson of Montgomery, Ala., bowed out last November because of continuing health problems.

Kelly, who had been scheduled to retire the $57,000-a-year post at the first of the year, agreed to stay on until Feb. 15 after Johnson withdrew.

IN NEARLY a decade of public life, Webster has attracted little criticism. Some civil rights lawyers suggest that if there is a weakness in his record, it is in that field. But others say they found Webster fair even when they lost cases in his courtroom.

Webster's membership in two private social clubs which have no black or women members could prove to be a source of controversy when he seeks confirmation in the Senate. Bell's membership in the same type of clubs in his native Atlanta set off a round of criticism from civil rights groups at the time he faced Senate confirmation a year ago.

Delta Gammas refuse request to establish K-State chapter

By CINDY FRIESEN
Staff Writer

Delta Gamma sorority has declined an invitation to colonize at K-State and use a residence hall to house new sorority members, Barb Robel, Panhellenic advisor, said Wednesday.

After conducting a mail survey of all Kansas alumnae, the Delta Gamma national officers believe it would be impossible for a new sorority without a house to compete with sororities already established on campus, according to Betty Norris, Delta Gamma national treasurer.

"We came to the conclusion without a house we would not be able to successfully compete with the other houses on campus," Norris said.

Panhellenic invited Delta Gamma to colonize at K-State more than two years ago and gave them until Jan. 15, 1978 to reply.

THE council extended the invitation because an increasing number of girls were going through rush each year with no additional space available in sorority housing.

Faced with no adequate facility in Manhattan and a near $750,000 estimate to build and furnish a new sorority house, the Delta Gammas were offered a residence hall floor to house their new pledges on a one to two year basis.

Panhellenic knew it would be hard for a new chapter to compete with other sororities under these living conditions but had no other alternative, Robel said last December.

SPECIFICATIONS for building a new house would require 200 square feet for each of an estimated 60 women.

"We were looking at (a total of) 12,000 square feet," Norris said. "I'm not sure what the building costs in Manhattan are, but it would be roughly $30 per square foot."

"We felt that it would be too much of an undertaking to float and pay (see DELTA, page 2)

FBI files show Hoover angered by criticism of his Kennedy investigation

WASHINGTON (AP)—In the years following John Kennedy's assassination, J. Edgar Hoover fumed over the mounting criticism of the FBI investigation of the case but decided to ignore most of the critics, at least publicly.

In private, he kept meticulous records on the critics' personal lives as well as their public comments about the bureau.

The details emerged from 58,754 pages of FBI files that the bureau made public Wednesday to comply with requests under the Freedom of Information Act.

The half-ton of documents, together with 40,001 pages released in December, comprise virtually all of the bureau's investigative files on the murder of the president Nov. 22, 1963, in Dallas.

Delta Gamma refusal limits house numbers off that kind of loan," she said. "The girls' housing bills would be so expensive and it would be unfair to ask the girls to pay that much."

THE decision not to colonize had nothing to do with K-State, according to Margaret Nordin, Delta Gamma alumna and assistant director of the Center for Student Development.

"They (the Delta Gammas) have given this a lot of consideration and have spent several years hoping to colonize here," Nordin said. "They also feel the University was very generous in their consideration given."

Commenting on the declined invitation, Robel, who had not yet informed the Panhellenic Counsel of the decision, said she was not sure what the counsel would do next.

"We have three options open to us: either stay with the status quo; ask another group to come (to K-State) or expand within the system and have the houses pledge more girls than they have room to house," Robel said.

THIS batch of files begins in mid-1964. Scores of letters and memos reflect the cool but polite relationship between the FBI and the Warren Commission as the commission launched its probe of the case.

Later that year, the commission was to report its conclusion that Lee Harvey Oswald killed Kennedy and that he acted alone. Hoover had arrived at the same belief months earlier.

However, a number of writers and researchers were attracting considerable public attention with their theories that Oswald and the man who shot him to death in the Dallas police station, nightclub owner Jack Ruby, were part of some dark conspiracy of varying origins.

Nothing was found in the first batch of FBI files to disprove the Warren Commission's conclusion. The initial scrutiny of the second batch of files also yielded no startling new information.

What the material does show is the countless hours FBI men spent trying to document claims made by such critics as Mark Lane, Harold Weisberg, Edward Epstein and Dick Gregory in speeches, books and broadcast interviews.

AN FBI official prepared a line-by-line analysis of a William Manchester article to be published in Life magazine. The bureau obtained tapes and transcripts of radio and television shows featuring the critics.

Disturbed about Gregory's attacks in 1964, one FBI official wrote to Hoover, "We have long suspected that Gregory is demented. Nevertheless, the comments he has made are utterly ridiculous and we should confront him and tell him in no uncertain terms that he better stop putting out such gutter talk." Hoover concluded that a confrontation would serve no purpose and vetoed the proposal.

Two years later, author Richard Whalen approached FBI officials to solicit cooperation in writing a magazine article answering critics of the Warren Commission.

William Sullivan, one of Hoover's top advisers, supported Whalen, calling him "reliable and trustworthy and has an extremely high opinion of the bureau."

'Defector' returns to U.S.

MINNEAPOLIS (AP)—Eight years ago, Simas Kudirka was denied asylum in the United States. On Tuesday he hugged the Coast Guard officer who had rejected his earlier plea for safety.

Kudirka greeted Lt. Cmdr. Doug Lundberg, the Coast Guard officer who wept when the Lithuanian was returned to Russian soldiers in 1970.

Kudirka, 47, jumped from a Russian ship to the Coast Guard cutter Vigilant at a meeting of the two ships off the New England coast and announced his intention to defect from the Soviet Union. After 10 hours of delicate negotiations over fishing rights, the Coast Guard allowed Russian soldiers to forcibly retrieve him.

Arena collapses

HARTFORD, Conn.—The coliseum roof of Hartford's three-year-old Civic Center collapsed under heavy rain and snow Wednesday, injuring no one, but dealing what Mayor George Athanson called "a serious blow" to hopes for downtown revival.

Athanson called the Civic Center, which cost $70 million and was the focus of a major urban renewal effort, "the focal point of the new beat of Hartford."

The flat, 1,400-ton roof of the 10,000-seat arena crumpled without warning at 4:19 a.m., just hours after 4,800 basketball fans had left the arena.

Initial assessments were that repairs would take 1½ to two years, and Arthur Lumsden, president of the Greater Hartford Chamber of Commerce, predicted business losses of between $15 million and $20 million a year.

Inaugurals: bigger and better

WASHINGTON—Future presidents, Republicans as well as Democrats, can have bigger and better inaugurations because of a $700,000 trust fund announced Wednesday by President Carter's 1977 inaugural committee.

Bardyl Tirana, co-chairman of the Carter committee, told reporters at the White House that the new "Jimmy Carter Inaugural Trust" should provide at least $140,000 to $150,000 every four years to help finance all future presidential oath-taking celebrations.

Tirana said creation of the trust was made possible because the Carter inaugural collected $820,000 more than it spent.

In addition to putting at least $700,000 into the trust, the Carter committee will make an outright, unrestricted gift of $100,000 to whatever committee handles the presidential inaugural in 1981.

No penalty, even if guilty

TOPEKA—Attorney General Curt Schneider said Wednesday he had not yet decided whether to prosecute Senate President Ross Doyen for illegally concealing $1,225 in campaign contributions in 1976.

"If we feel that prosecution is warranted, then we will certainly go ahead with prosecution proceedings," Schneider said.

However, there is no penalty for the specific statute Doyen violated and, therefore, it is unclear if further action will be taken in the case.

It was suggested the Senate could take action against Doyen, possibly in the form of a censure, but a check with lawmakers Wednesday indicated that was unlikely.

Doyen, cornered by reporters Wednesday, admitted "I made a mistake" and said he regretted the episode.

She's getting closer...

OMAHA, Neb.—A mother-to-be didn't quite make it to the delivery room in an Omaha hospital recently, so the birth took place in a hospital elevator.

Mother and baby were in fine condition, but the mother was upset nevertheless.

The mother kept telling a nurse: "How embarrassing! How embarrassing!"

The nurse soothed: "Nonsense! Don't be embarrassed. This sort of thing happens all the time. If you think this is something to be embarrassed about, you should have been here about 18 months ago. A woman had a baby right out there on the hospital lawn."

The mother was not consoled. "I know!" she wailed. "That was me, too!"

Kansas House gives tentative okay to capital punishment reinstatement

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill to restore the state's death penalty on a limited basis won preliminary approval by a 71-47 vote Wednesday in the Kansas House.

If it receives the 63 votes required for passage on a final ballot Thursday, it will go to the Senate. Its fate there is considered to be in doubt.

The bill would prescribe capital punishment as an alternative to life imprisonment in cases of premeditated, malicious first degree murder.

One jury would determine the guilt or innocence of a defendant. A second jury would consider the sentence. The death penalty could be ordered by the second jury if it found the existence of one or more specified aggravating circumstances, and that any mitigating circumstances were outweighed.

Any sentence of death would be subject to automatic review by the Kansas Supreme Court.

The bill survived more than three hours of debate and amendment and two test votes.

BEFORE the House voted to recommend the bill, it rejected, 75-

50, a motion by Rep. Arthur Douville (R-Overland Park) to kill the measure.

Rep. Richard Brewster (D-Topeka) chairman of the House Judiciary committee and one of the authors of the bill, explained its provisions before the subject was opened up for debate.

Rep. Joseph Hoagland (R-Overland Park), a foe of capital punishment, offered the amendment to have separate juries to determine guilt or innocence and to decide on the sentence.

Hoagland also proposed an amendment that would have required any judge opposed to the death penalty to disqualify himself in a sentencing procedure, but it was voted down.

Hoagland said his interest was to have justice uniform throughout the state. He maintained that without the amendment, some judicial districts would have the death penalty; others would not, depending on the philosophy of the judge.

Rep. Dean Hinshaw (R-Hutchinson) attempted to broaden the bill to make the death penalty an alternative for any murder committed in connection with the commission of a felony.

THIS drew strong objection from Rep. John Stites (R-Manhattan) who said it would make the bill "atrocious."

Hinshaw said premeditation and malice are hard to prove.

Ticket-buying tough

They did it again.

K-State athletic ticket sales have always given K-State students the back seat.

Alumni get first priority, general public the second and then K-State students.

And now, in the case of tonight's Russian-K-State basketball game, K-State students will be taking a back seat to high school students.

Last November when ticket sales were first announced, K-State students were not told that in order to purchase tickets after the end of the fall semester they would have to retain their fall fee cards.

K-STATE students who did the logical thing and threw away their expired fee cards at the end of last semester are in for a cold slap in the face if they think they are going to purchase a $2.50 reserved seat ticket with their present fee card.

Although there are still "three or four thousand" tickets left to sell, according to the athletic ticket office, K-State students who have paid their fees for this semester are being turned away at the athletic ticket booth for the lack of last semester's fee card.

This is ridiculous.

The logic behind this policy is that it will eliminate the threat of a student buying one ticket last semester and coming back and buying another one this semester.

It is plain to see this logic is ludicrous because of the surplus of tickets.

THE ATHLETIC ticket office's present plan is to sell the remaining tickets at the door at $2.50 to high school students (for general admission seating), $5.50 to the general public (which includes K-State students without last semester's fee card), and $2.50 (for a reserved seat) to K-State students who have last semester's fee card.

The Collegian offers an alternative solution which may be too late for this event, but nonetheless should be considered when devising future ticket sale policies.

Since K-State students were not informed of the policy regarding the purchasing of these tickets after the fall semester, they should be able to purchase the $2.50 reserved seats with their fall or spring fee card during ticket office hours today. This would allow students to see the game and more tickets would be sold.

Furthermore, tickets at the door should be sold indiscriminately to the general public at $5.50 per ticket.

Those sensuous drags...

There seems to be a semi-concerted effort to put the tobacco industry out of business these days in the United States.

Everyone has a method to help people quit smoking cigarettes. They range from the "cut 'em off all at once" to the "tapering off gradually."

The "cut 'em off all at once" method is not recommended highly by those telling success stories. The withdrawal symptoms are generally too severe if you were a hard-core (at least a pack a day) smoker.

There are several ways to execute this method. One is to drive down Tuttle Creek Boulevard at 80 miles per hour throwing all your cigarettes out the back left window without looking. This way you don't really know when the cigarettes are out of sight until that irresistible craving for nicotine hits you.

THE BEST WAY to overcome the urge to stop and buy another pack is to increase your speed to 120 m.p.h. so you don't have time to stop.

The "tapering off gradually" method is the success story of many former butt-suckers. It is fairly easy to cut those cigarettes down to two or three a day, which in itself is a notable achievement. However, cutting off those final two or three cigarettes isn't as easy.

But when you start counting your cigarettes and setting your alarm clock between those sensuous drags, you haven't quite kicked the habit.

The latest method devised to get people to quit smoking is a dandy. It is only costing $23 million of the taxpayers' money.

Illustrious Joseph Califano, Health, Education and Welfare secretary, who by the way used to smoke three packs a day, has come up with a great ad campaign to scare the hell out of cigarette smokers.

It could be very effective if some of the tactics used in the 30s with marijuana were employed.

Not to sound too sarcastic about the idea, an anti-smoking campaign is quite justified. With the huge amount of information linking cigarettes to lung cancer, heart disease and emphysema, the fact that more than 50 million Americans smoke is no laughing matter.

But a $23 billion ad campaign will make few people stop smoking or convince many teenagers not to start. After all, what do you do with your hands if you don't smoke?

CALIFANO'S campaign is just aimed in the wrong direction. He obviously hasn't considered what it is that makes 50 million Americans get a sudden urge to put a butt in their mouths. Well, the answer is quite simple. We (yes, I too am a victim of not having anything to do with my hands) are addicts.

Tobacco is one of the most physiologically damaging substances used in the world today. And nicotine is one of the most addictive drugs in common use. Advertising just won't do the job.

But many people don't consider smoking an addiction and they will become aware of it only when the supply is cut off. And the first step in rehabilitating an addict is to get him to admit he is one.

I would suggest the best way to do this is to make tobacco an illegal substance. But the government would have to cut off its huge subsidies to the tobacco industry. This wouldn't be an easy proposal to get through Congress with the big and powerful tobacco industry lobby breathing down Congressmen's necks.

But lobbies can be bought.

THE TRICK IS to compromise with another powerful lobby—the underworld. Legalize pot.

The justification for such a measure is really quite simple. Everyone can smoke a cigarette in public with no threat of punishment. If cigarettes are illegal and pot is legal, the several million people who smoke pot can come out in the open.

Cigarettes will be smoked only in a private and concealed setting, thus cutting down the number of cigarettes smoked.

Naturally, a lot of people will be high all the time. But what the hell. It doesn't cause cancer.

There also is a lot of taxable money in the pot world. The government would end up making money by the time it cut off the subsidy payments to tobacco farmers.

Medical evidence strongly favors pot over cigarettes. It is not addictive. It does not cause cancer, heart disease or emphysema. It does not make your teeth brown or give you bad breath.

So let's get high and not dead.

Some people never learn that all people can't be bought...unless of course you have a good bag of Columbian or a carton of cigarettes.

Bergland says U.S. should trade wheat for Russian oil

WICHITA (AP)—Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland said Wednesday he would seek acceptance of an exchange agreement in which American wheat would be traded for Russian oil.

Bergland told a group of 35 striking farmers that such an exchange is a "real possibility" and would serve as a good means of reducing the record U.S. wheat surplus.

The agriculture secretary plans to visit the Soviet Union in May to develop markets for American farm products.

BUT Bergland assured the farmers, members of the American Agriculture movement striking for higher farm prices, that he would accept only a stable trade relationship with the Soviets.

"I have no intention of pursuing an export policy that's going to be on again, off again, hit and miss, with prices out of sight and then through the floor. It kills us all," he said.

Bergland, who addressed the National Association of Wheat Growers convention Tuesday night, met with the striking farmers over morning coffee at a downtown hotel. The meeting had no advance publicity and only three reporters were present.

During an hour's discussion, Bergland said he supported the parity price concept being sought by the farmers but noted, "the question is how to get there."

"I think the best way to get there with wheat is for everyone to get in the set-aside program, use the resale," Bergland said of two USDA programs, one calling for a 20 percent set-aside on wheat and the other extending government loans for keeping grain in storage.

BERGLAND said that since the uniform grain storage agreement was dismantled five years ago, commercial storage rates have gone "out of sight." He said controls would be reinstituted on federally inspected warehouses beginning May 1, and that farm storage rates would then be adjusted to reflect the change in commercial rates.

Bergland also told the farmers that the present law on beef imports was "unfair," noting that while U.S. cow herds shrunk by 14 million head in the last three years, due to drought and low prices, beef imports stayed at 1.3 billion pounds.

"We're looking into the feasibility of changing the law so when our own cow numbers are shrinking, that there be reductions in imports," he said.

Bergland approached the question of parity, the goal of the strike movement, with caution. But he defended an earlier estimate that if full parity were legislated on all farm commodities, the average food bill would rise 20 percent.

HE also warned that if parity were realized, runaway land inflation would result at the rate of 10 percent a year, encouraging more foreign and corporate investment in farm land.

At full parity, farmers theoretically have the same purchasing power for the items they sell as their forebears had early in this century when the costs were said to be in step.

Bergland praised the progress of the American Agriculture movement, calling the achievements "spectacular" from a public relations standpoint.

Farmers further protests by applying for food stamps

TOPEKA (AP)—The director of the food stamp program in Kansas said Wednesday that farmers who apply for the aid are apparently doing it more as a protest than in hopes of actually receiving aid.

Richard Burr of the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, said he expected an influx of food stamp applications from farmers, "mainly as another way of expressing their plight."

Burr's comments came as about 25 farmers from the Abilene area gathered at the Dickinson County courthouse to apply for the government aid.

He said there had been a noticeable increase in the number of farmers applying for the aid the past month or two, and he thought some of them would be eligible for the aid.

"I imagine most who are eligible have marginal farm operations or are small farmers," Burr said. "We do have some who have been participating in the food stamp program for the past year or two."

Burr said the farmers were frustrated with the Department of Agriculture and its secretary, Bob Bergland, "so they are going to attempt to receive benefits from the food stamp program."

The program is administered on the national level by the USDA.

The SRS official said his department bases eligibility on the applicant's latest income tax statements.

Burr said a family of four may qualify for food stamps if their combined income is less than $6,804 after deducting all allowable deductions. The hitch for the farmers is that they cannot have more than $1,500 in what the department calls "eligible resources" such as grain in storage that can be converted to cash quickly. Any loans against such grain would be considered in determining the total amount of the resources.

Vet professor is world group VP

By SCOTT WIBLE
Staff Writer

A K-State veterinary medicine professor has been elected to serve as a vice-president of the World Veterinary Medicine (WVM).

Jacob Mosier, head of surgery and medicine, took office last May as one of five vice presidents representing various world regions.

Throughout his four-year term, Mosier will help plan annual WVA meetings in Paris as well as help plan and serve on the resolutions committee for the 1979 World Veterinary Congress in Moscow.

The president and vice presidents of the association are elected by delegates from 53 countries, the candidates themselves serve as delegates. The current vice presidents represent North America, South America, Australia, the USSR and Turkey.

The WVA is not made up of individuals, but is an "association of associations", Mosier said. Each member is actually a group of people—national associations, organizations or specialty groups.

Each country selects one person to serve on the permanent committee, the governing body of the WVA. The number of votes that person represents at Congress is based upon the number of veterinarians in that person's national association. The United States and the USSR each have five votes.

Mosier said over 167,000 veterinarians are represented in the association around the world.

Mosier explained the purposes of the WVA as being a communications link around the world so that countries can share their experiences, problems and solutions in veterinary medicine; to organize and hold the World Veterinary Congress every four years; to establish standards of veterinary medicine education; to standardize technology and to maintain a film bank to be made available to all members.

Mosier spent six years on the executive board of the American Veterinary Medical Association before being appointed as the U.S. representative to the WVA two years ago. He has served on the K-State faculty since 1950, after graduating from K-State in 1945 and receiving his Master's degree in 1948.

Wool team wins at national contest

The K-State wool-judging team beat out eight other teams last weekend to win the wool-judging contest at the National Western Livestock Show in Denver, Colo.

High scorer in the contest was Cathy Langston, junior in Animal Science and Industry (AS&I), with 644 out of a possible 700 points.

The wool-judging team won permanent possession of a traveling challenge trophy by winning the contest in 1965. The team had also won the contest in 1959 and 1963. The team is coached by Clifford Spaeth, assistant professor in AS&I.

Of the two other teams participating in the contest, the junior livestock judging team placed third against a record number of 28 teams as well as placing first in the carload judging.

In individual competition, Warren Kroecker, junior in AS&I, placed fifth in the sheep judging competition.

K-State's meat-judging team placed sixth out of thirteen by scoring 3,433 out of 4,000 points.

Alan Sents, junior in AS&I, placed seventh in overall meats competition.

Outcast dogs set fireman, town ablaze

ST. LOUIS (AP)—When St. Louis' fire chief banished dogs from the city's 31 firehouses in the dead of winter, he set firemen snarling with anger and citizens howling in protest. By Wednesday, a shocked populace had adopted all the mascots.

Fire Chief Charles Kamprad evicted the dogs last week, saying he was enforcing a 30-year-old city ordinance against mascots in the firehouses. He also said he was worried that animals underfoot might delay firemen's response to calls.

And, he said, the dogs could expose the city to law suits should they bite someone. But the firemen were having none of it. They responded angrily that the dogs gave them companionship during lulls and served as watchdogs when fire fighters were at fires. The dog fight caught the fancy of the local news media, and the public became involved—particularly after it was reported Tuesday that four new-born puppies had frozen to death after their mother was turned out of Engine House 28.

Internships prove helpful in depressed job market

By NANCY HORST
Staff Writer

As job markets grow tighter, practical experience is becoming a larger part of higher education. Professional internships are one avenue of gaining the experience and many students are using that route.

But University officials are quick to point out that an internship is neither a free ride in the job market or an endeavor recommended for everyone.

Internship programs are available through many K-State colleges and departments including engineering, architecture and design, veterinary medicine, business, political science and journalism.

Credit, and often a salary, can be received in exchange for working in the field for a specified period of time.

THE COLLEGE of Engineering participates in the Co-op work-study program in cooperation with about 15 engineering firms, according to Dwight Nesmith, director of cooperative education and coordinator of the program.

Engineering students can work for a firm for 18 months in five sessions alternating with class attendance, Nesmith said. The alternating assignment continues for three years, delaying graduation one year, he said.

Although the students do not receive class credit, the work is recorded on the student's transcript and firms pay from $600 to $1000 a month allowing a student to earn up to $16,000 in the 18-month period, he said. But Nesmith emphasizes the experience is the main benefit of the program.

HE ADDED that it is not uncommon for a student to get a job offer from that firm.

About 50 students are participating in the Co-op program but Nesmith says there are never enough jobs to meet the demand of the applicants.

Other professional fields share the problem of not having enough internships available.

Joseph Barton-Dobenin, professor of business administration, said 31 business students worked in internships last summer but he could have placed twice that number if the jobs had been available.

Because of the job scarcity, Barton-Dobenin said he is selective about the students he recommends for internships and the jobs they are hired to. The college wants to send "quality" students who are worthy of the position, he said.

Barton-Dobenin said the internship program is successful in giving students a "touch of reality."

Eugene Laughlin, professor of business administration, coordinates internships for accounting students who can work for Certified Public Accounting (CPA) firms for a semester.

Both the business and accounting internships earn a salary and three hours of credit.

ALTHOUGH Laughlin believes the internships are a benefit in obtaining a job and making professional contacts, he is hesitant to recommend them for all students.

The student must relocate, extend graduation time and be careful about course sequences, he said.

Architecture students can also earn money, 15 hours of credit and experience through an internship program coordinated by Gene Ernst, associate professor of architecture.

Students work for architectural firms across the nation for 30 weeks during their fourth or fifth year, Ernst said. The program has a high student response—in the last two years about one-half of the graduates have participated, he said.

TOM NOLTE, junior in architecture and business administration, completed a 7-month internship in December with an Overland Park firm and couldn't say enough good things about the program.

"The internship is real beneficial because it gives you a chance to get out and see the 8-to-5 world," Nolte said. "The atmosphere is different than can be expressed in the classroom."

Nolte described his work experience as an "ego-shattering awakening" because he found that the first job is neither prestigious nor easy as he had expected.

"There's so much you have to learn," he said. "You need the guidance of a professional. There are so many facets in architecture and you can get a taste of them all."

Nolte said he invested at least $300 in sending letters and resumes and compiling his portfolio. But the investment and the extra semester he'll need of school were worth it, he said.

Jeff Holyfield, December graduate in journalism, also could not overstate the benefits of internships. Holyfield, now a reporter for the Associated Press in Kansas City, worked for the Wichita Eagle last summer.

ALTHOUGH he could not say if the internship got him the job with AP, he said the experience helped.

"If you don't have any experience, you really come up short looking for a job," he said.

Journalism internships are coordinated by Bill Brown, director of student publications, and like other internships, there are never enough.

Last summer about 15 students interned on newspapers earning up to three credit hours and a salary, Brown said.

The political science department also offers up to three hours of credit for a semester of work in many areas of politics, public administration and law, according to Philip Althoff, professor of political science and coordinator of the internships. But the students seldom receive a salary.

Althoff says the benefit of the program is three-fold. The student not only gains work experience, but he can relate his knowledge and skills to a practical field and he can make professional contacts.

HAVING good letters of recommendation could give some advantage in some cases to a student applying for a job or law school, he said.

Although no credit or salary is involved, veterinary medicine students also can get beneficial experience through summer internships, said John Noordsy, assistant dean of vet med.

Noordsy said the college encourages students to get some practical experience and about 80 percent of the students do.

'The Betsy' stalls

Being a connoisseur of the arts is like having the flu: often one is subject to fits of extreme nausea. In either case, a release is necessary. In the former, gagging one's guts out will suffice, but the latter, induced by lousy entertainment with all the charisma of "All-Star Wrestling," is difficult to deal with.

And so, with the mental health of the Front Row staff at stake, and with a deep admiration for old fashioned cynicism, Ragtime is born.

In actuality, Ragtime is a form of syncopated music. In the Collegian, Ragtime is a form of castigated criticism. Ragtime will serve as the one-handed round of applause for the arts; a combined Oscar, Emmy and Grammy award for the absolute worst of the week.

"Keep 'em honest" as Tricky Dick once said, and Ragtime will attempt to do just that.

The people live.

TO START the semester off with a bang, Harold Robbins has a juicy one out for you porn fans. "The Betsy," a novel centering around smut in the automobile industry, combines three musts to sell 11 million copies in paperback: sex, scandals and scares.

Robbins covers the industry, past and present, in a disorganized fashion, unloading a Peyton Place type saga of three generations of Haldemans. The Haldemans represent your typical Detroit family, except that they go under the motto of "millions get you anywhere and more," or "do it in the dirt."

The story is told in the first person, rather awkwardly at times, through Angelo Perino; race car driver, business whiz and resident pervert. Robbins goes through great pains to give a detailed account of Perino's sex life, driving home the imagery to the point of nausea.

The entire novel is written from a sexist angle, portraying females as hot-to-trot pit-stop poopsies anxiously awaiting the bite and bedtime from Perino, Mr. Divine of the track himself.

Last Tango in Paris; an empty dance card

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
Collegian Reviewer

At the risk of making a pun for those who have seen the movie, "Last Tango in Paris" just doesn't cut the butter. The film is not entertaining, interesting, exciting or sensual. It is boring throughout, even during the well-publicized sex scenes.

The sex in the movie isn't erotic. While there are plenty of scenes with Maria Schneider's naked body and of two people having sexual intercourse, the feelings of love between two people that make sex arousing are nonexistent in this movie. In this respect, "The Waltons" is erotic when compared to "Last Tango."

In the beginning of the story, a man and a woman meet in an empty apartment they are inspecting to rent. They say less than a dozen sentences to one another before the man takes the woman into his arms. After making love on the floor while still dressed in their overcoats, the couple leave the apartment separately.

THE MAN rents the apartment, furnishes it with a few chairs, a table and a mattress, and he and the woman meet there to have sex. Both of them use the apartment and each other to escape the events of their everyday lives.

The man refuses to tell the woman his name or anything about his life, and he will not allow the woman to tell him her name or anything about her life. They don't go out together to socialize or to be together because the man wants their sex in the apartment to be the only relationship.

The underlying theme of the movie is expressed by the man when he tells the woman: "Everything outside this place is bullshit." For the two people, the anonymous sex they enjoy is the only worthwhile thing in their lives.

As they see more and more of each other the couple begin to share small parts of their lives. As they become increasingly personal with each other, their relationship begins to deteriorate. The sex they once enjoyed becomes increasingly brutal and sadistic.

Although the presence of Marlon Brando on the screen demands attention. Even his acting doesn't make the muddled presentation of the plot interesting. Maria Schneider is a competent actress, but has very little to work with.

Bernardo Bertolucci, the film's director and writer, has committed the unforgivable sin in motion pictures by making a movie around two characters the audience can't identify with or hold any sympathy for.

"Last Tango in Paris" is a two-hour drag. As a film, it doesn't even manage to reach the standards of cheap porn, which is the best comment that can be made.

'Photograph' fades

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

In a continuing effort to push their product, record companies spend a significant portion of their promotions money giving out free albums. Radio stations receive their albums in this manner, accompanied by photos, press releases, and capsule reviews of the artist's career.

Newspapers also receive such albums from time to time, although on a much smaller scale. If a company has a group it really wants to push, it may send some good albums. Usually, however, the albums range from mediocre to awful. Such promotions are a great way for the company to test the market for new artists, or old ones making a comeback. The album could also be something a little unusual that they are unsure of the public's interest in. Reactions to such albums are an important part of the decision on whether or not the company gives the artist a chance.

If you've ever seen a stack of such demonstration albums, you know how funny some of them can be.

A RECENT DIP into the Collegian's grab-bag of free albums brought little in the way of new talent discoveries. In fact, most would make your speakers cry.

The album that left all the others behind in the race for the gong was "I Am a Photograph," by Amanda Lear. One doesn't know whether laughter or crying is the appropriate reaction to the album.

The music is purely disco, at its most basic level. In fact, they play the same thing over and over, throughout the album. Every so often they are considerate enough to change the key, but is even a brief sax solo too much to ask for?

Accompanied by three or four backup singers who copy the already indistinguishable European-style disco groups, Lear adds her somewhat unique lead vocals. She aims at the crowd who enjoys the heavy breathing of Barry White and the moaning of Donna Summer. Unfortunately, Lear resembles both vocal styles at the same time; she's trying to be a disco-Marlene Dietrich, with her deep vocals and monotonous chanting.

LYRICALLY, her corny rhymes and trite expressions are too much for anyone to be subjected to. The highlights are the 'long' version of "Blood and Honey" and "Alphabet". Never having heard the short version of the former, one can only surmise that their difference is like that between a slow death and a quick one.

As for "Alphabet," listening to Lear go through the entire alphabet, telling what each letter stands for is boring even for dance music.

The album merits nothing but a quick toss in the trash, before your friends catch you with it, and maybe a silent tear for the sad state of contemporary music. If an album like this can even make it to pressing, something is wrong.

If you ever get the chance, browse at some promo albums. Now and then, you'll find some gems, like the poems of Edgar Allen Poe set to music by some washed-up psychodelic band, or maybe even the next Amanda Lear album.

Most promotional art albums belong nowhere but the discount rack at Woolworth's, but you can learn a lot from them.

You might even find some music.

Streisand and Redford collaborate; movie produces tearful memories

By ALLISON CARLISLE
ERKELENS
Arts Editor

Put Robert Redford and Barbra Streisand together with a lilting hit song in the background, add a script with cute quips and conflict, finish it with a sad ending and you have a movie that everyone goes home and cries over for weeks.

"The Way We Were" is a prime example of the Love Story genre of tearjerkers; not exactly what one would term meaningful or earth-shattering, but enjoyable entertainment.

Intended to be a box office hit from the start, the movie follows the evolving relationship of a hot-shot college jock (Redford as Hubble Gardiner) and a workaholic young communist (Streisand as Katie). Though the two travel in radically different social circles in college, they manage to drum up a sort of interest for each other, based on their evident differences.

ROMANCE, however, waits at bay until 1944, when Streisand finds Redford in a bar during World War II. After a couple of false starts, they finally fall in love, get hitched and begin a precarious marriage.

The whole point of the movie is that things always came too easily for him, and she insists on making things difficult. Each has a distinct desire to share in the other's world, but once there, find it quite distasteful.

Half a million fights and one child later, they find that compatibility is impossible, and Kleenex stock goes up 10 points.

Streisand, who has already proven herself as an actress as well as a recording artist, plays her role with as much depth as is demanded. The diversified emotional climate in the movie is well adhered to, as she laughs and cries on command.

REDFORD, though quite the rage with female movie-goers, has yet to establish consistency in skill. With such disasters as "The Great Gatsby" behind him, as well as acclaims for "Three Days of the Condor," Redford turns in a better-than-average performance.

The supporting cast is as insignificant as is possible, with the two lead roles dominating the entire course of the story. Although basically serious, a few well-written one-liners are sure to draw a guffaw from the audience.

Volunteers work to finish renovation of UFM house

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

Volunteer workers have almost finished repairs on the University For Man (UFM) house, according to Development Director Joe Rippetoe.

UFM purchased the Straube Scholarship house at 1221 Thurston from the Endowment Association last year, because Endowment could not afford to bring the house up to fire standards.

Workers have been remodeling the house since UFM moved in last August. So far, they have improved the house to meet fire codes, rebuilt the main stairway, rewired most of the building and built a new kitchen, Rippetoe said.

According to Rippetoe, most of the work has been done by volunteers.

"We haven't been able to have as much volunteer labor as we'd like, because a lot of the work is highly skilled," Rippetoe said.

According to Rippetoe, all kinds of people volunteer to work on the house.

"One day last fall, a bunch of student senators came by to help us work on the building," Rippetoe said.

One of the volunteers is George Sellens, a Manhattan resident.

"I didn't want to work at a desk anymore, so I volunteered to help out here," he said.

In renovating the house, money has been a major factor.

"The main effort here has been to see how economical we could do it, like making desks out of doors," Sellens said pointing to a homemade desk.

Even though considerable work has been done, Rippetoe said all of the work isn't finished.

IN TROUBLE...Oklahoma State's Randy Wright looks for someone to pass to after a ball-handling miscue. K-State's Mike Evans (12) and Fred Barton apply the defensive pressure.

Evans stays cool at the line to fire 'Cats past Cowboys

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

Clutch free throws by Mike Evans and strong reserve work by Brent Murphy helped the K-State Wildcats stave off a second half rally by the stubborn Oklahoma State Cowboys and squeak out a 62-59 victory before 11,220 fans in Ahearn Field House last night.

Shooting below his average from the free throw line lately, Evans hit two crucial free throws with three seconds remaining to put the game in the victory column for the 'Cats.

"I just stepped up to the line and relaxed and concentrated," Evans said. "I knew they were in."

Evans, the game's leading scorer with 27 points, went seven for nine from the field and three for six from the line in tallying 17 first half points.

THE 'CATS used an effective zone defense and 50 percent shooting from the field in the first half to move to a 37-27 half-time lead but were never able to shake the determined Cowboys in the second half.

The 'Cats coming out ice cold scored only nine points in the first ten minutes of the second half.

The big surprise in the second half came from the bench, when Murphy, a 6-7 freshman forward, stepped in after starter Rolando Blackman picked up his fourth foul with 18:08 left to play in the game.

MURPHY picked up six big rebounds, blocked one shot and made one steal in the second half to lead the 'Cats defensive efforts.

"Brent did a fine job tonight," commented 'Cat head coach Jack Hartman on Murphy's play.

"We were fortunate to win this one," Hartman said.

With the victory the 'Cats move their season record to 11-5 and 2-2 in Big Eight play, while the Cowboys dropped to 6-9 overall and 0-4 in the Big Eight.

Mathews and Snider set for Hall of Fame

NEW YORK (AP) — The recent California rainstorms kept Eddie Mathews and Duke Snider outdoors Wednesday, the day before the Baseball Writers Association of America announces whether these slugging Hall of Fame candidates will be admitted to the famous shrine in Cooperstown, N.Y.

Mathews and Snider knocked on the door last year, but were sent away because they weren't named on 75 percent of the ballots cast by the baseball writers. Only Ernie Banks of the Chicago Cubs was voted in by the BBWAA last year, surpassing the necessary 288 votes. Mathews picked up 239 and the late Gil Hodges had 224, followed by Enos Slaughter's 222 and Snider's 212.

Reached by telephone at his home in Fallbrook, Calif., the one-time "Duke of Flatbush" said he was shoveling water and mud from his backyard while hoping for a phone call from the BBWAA.

"I had pretty high hopes this year," said Snider, the power hitting centerfielder for the Brooklyn Dodgers in the 1950s. "I don't have that many records, but I was one of the better hitters in the Brooklyn Dodger era.

"I was one of the most feared hitters in the league. I guess my strength was consistency. I hit 40 homers for five straight years (1953-57). During the '50s I was compared with Mickey Mantle and Willie Mays on an even par, and I could play centerfield just as well as they could.

"I'm not angry or upset," said Snider, who became eligible for the Hall in 1967. "But I feel I belong."

HE NOW is a broadcaster for the Montreal Expos.

Mathews, a scout for the Milwaukee Brewers, also has his supporters, including his mother, Eloise, who answered the telephone at Eddie's home in Rancho Santa Fe, Calif.

"Ed's out on some jobs in the area because of the big storm," she said. "I know he wants to get in very badly. We're all hoping, keeping our fingers crossed.

Redskins fire George Allen

WASHINGTON (AP)—George Allen has been fired as coach of the Washington Redskins, the Washington Post reported Wednesday night.

In a copyrighted story in Thursday's editions, the Post quoted Edward Bennett Williams, president of the National Football League team, as saying, "I just reached the point where I couldn't wait any longer for George to make up his mind and have so advised him of our decision to look for a new head coach and general manager."

"Our negotiations with George Allen are concluded," Williams told the Post.

Last July, Williams called a news conference to announce the Redskins and Allen had agreed to a new four-year contract. But Allen, who has been coach of the team for the past seven years, never signed the pact, which called for an annual salary of $250,000.

Allen's record with the Redskins was 67-30-1, the best by one coach in the team's history. The team finished the past season with a 9-5 mark and failed to make the post-season playoffs for only the second time since 1971.

Amatuer or pro?

The Russians are coming, the Russians are coming.

Only this is an invasion by the Soviet basketball team, not by the Soviet army. Basketballs and bodies will be flying, not bullets and bombs.

The Russian team, currently touring the United States, having played and defeated UCLA and Brigham Young, will play K-State tonight, then travel to Providence and Connecticut to complete the tour.

This is the same team which will compete in the 1980 Olympics. They are classified as amateurs. Are they really?

THE RUSSIANS feature the best basketball talent in the Soviet Union. Since there are no professional teams in the Soviet Union, the highest echelon is their Olympic team.

This gives them a decided advantage in having the same team play together for several years. But the United States team is formed only a few months before the Olympics.

Also, the United States can only pick from its college players. Once a player graduates from college, he is generally lost to the Olympics because he goes into professional or semi-professional basketball or leaves sports entirely.

This means the U.S. Olympic team is composed of players 22 years of age or younger. It deprives us of some of our best talent. Imagine a starting Olympic team of Kareem Abdul-Jabbar at center, Maurice Lucas and Julius Erving at forward, and Pistol Pete Maravich and Paul Westphal at guard.

The Russians feature several players who have played in previous Olympics, including 7-4 Vladimir Tkachenko, 6-10 Anatoliy Mishkin and 6-5 Alexandr Salnikov, considered by many to be the best pure shooter outside the United States.

How will Soldner or Black be able to stop the 7-4 Tkachenko who can dunk the ball without jumping? Or how will Redding cope with Salnikov who displayed Bill Walton-type moves during the Soviets' victory over Indiana last November?

And the Ahearn crowd will have to learn the Russian equivalent of "eat 'em up, eat 'em up, KSU," in order to properly intimidate the Russian squad.

Due to these reasons, perhaps on the Russians next tour they should play teams in the NBA, instead of college teams. The Russian hockey team plays the NHL, so why shouldn't their basketball team play the best United States teams?

After all, it would be worth the money to see the Russians try to stop the run and gun of Bill Walton and the Portland Trailblazers.

K-State administrators nab win national Masters titles

Four K-State administrators collected seven national titles at the second annual United States Track and Field Federation (USTFF) Masters and Submasters Track and Field championships in Lincoln, Neb., Saturday.

James Upham, assistant director of Student Financial Assistance, led the K-State contingent with victories in the age 55-59 60-yard dash (7.5), 300-yard dash (40.0) and the 440-yard dash (1:07.4).

Arne Richards, documents librarian at Farrell Library, was a double winner in the age 45-59 mile run (5:12.8) and the two-mile run (11:10).

Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, won the age 55-59 mile run in 5:44.8 and finished second in the two-mile run (12:05.8) and the 880-yard run (2:37.7).

The final K-State champion was Michael Novak, director of Student Financial Assistance, who won the age 30-34 high jump with a leap of five feet, eight inches. He also finished second in the triple jump with a leap of 39 feet, five inches, and third in the 60-yard high hurdles in 8.2 seconds.

Novak received an additional honor at the meet when it was announced that he had been selected "Field Athlete of the Year, 1977" by the Mid-American Track and Field Association.

Big 8 scores

Kansas University proved it was the best unbeaten team in the Big Eight last night by knocking off Iowa State 100-82 in Ames, Ia.

Nebraska topped Oklahoma 78-64 in Norman, Okla., as Brian Banks pumped in 21 points for the Cornhuskers. Both teams now have 2-2 records in the conference.

Missouri came from behind in overtime to down Colorado 70-68 in Columbia, Mo., to even their record at 2-2. Clay Johnson, who led MU with 22 points, drove the baseline for the winning points which dropped CU to 1-3.

Missing radium turns up in Mississippi junkyard

MERIDIAN, Miss. (AP)—Eight stainless steel tubes holding dangerous doses of radioactive radium were found amid the debris in a junkyard Wednesday, six days after they disappeared from a hospital.

A few hours earlier, state officials said they had been unable to track down the tubes, each of which is just inches long and holds a 10-millimeter long piece of radium.

They denied there had been an attempt to keep news of the missing radium from the public.

ED Fuente, director of the Mississippi Board of Health's Radiological Health division, and an assistant found the radium at the St. Louis Junk Co., according to board spokesman Sam Mabry.

"All of the needles are now accounted for," Mabry said.

Nine of the containers were discovered missing from a locked room at Jeff Anderson Memorial Hospital on Thursday. One was quickly discovered in the hospital parking lot.

The others were found after officials remembered that "the hospital commonly sells scrap metal to the company and that the room where the needles had been stored was very junky," Mabry said. "Our people assume that the needles inadvertently got into the stuff that was sold to the junk company."

HOSPITAL administrator Chad Morgan said earlier that authorities had not "left anything unturned and as far as can be determined, the person or persons removing this material have either secreted it or disposed of it."

Morgan said Meridian authorities, area physicians and health officials were notified as soon as the loss was discovered.

Radium is used in the treatment of some cancers, but can be dangerous when not controlled. The tubes, or needles, can be opened so that a small hole permits escape of the radium's radiation.

Morgan and state health officials denied they had tried to keep from the public any news of the missing radium.

"I don't see how anyone can say there has been a coverup going on," said state health officer Alton Cobb. "That's simply not true."

Sources who asked not to be identified had said late Tuesday that Meridian authorities and state health officials had withheld information about the missing radioactive material since last Thursday.

State Sen. Sandy Steckler, chairman of the Mississippi Radiation Advisory Council, also denied any coverup.

Administrators recruit blacks for K-State graduate programs

By SALLY PEREZ
Collegian Reporter

A federally funded program has given two K-State administrators the opportunity to visit predominantly black southern schools in the past weeks to encourage black student enrollment at K-State.

Veryl Switzer, vice president for Student Affairs and assistant dean of Minority Affairs, and John Noonan, dean of graduate school, are working with the Title III Program to encourage blacks to complete their graduate programs in education at K-State.

The Title III Program, headed by Jordan Utsey, dean of the College of Education, would provide supportive services to these black students should they decide to enroll in graduate programs at K-State.

Noonan and Switzer made several trips to southern universities late in the fall semester to talk to black students and inform them of the program.

"We try to stress the type of background a student should have to come to K-State," Noonan said. The visits involve advising students academically and discussing different social matters which may concern them, he said.

"With these visits, I would like to try to eliminate the potential cultural shock for some of these students," Noonan said, "because many students, especially those that come from a predominantly black school, may have many questions about a school such as K-State."

STUDENTS have concerns about how they will be accepted at K-State, what race problems they may have to face or what courses they should take, Noonan said. The students appreciate any answers to these questions, he said.

If K-State programs did not meet the educational needs of these students, Noonan and Switzer said they would help them find a suitable program at another university.

"Even if the students do not come to K-State the graduates contribute to the National Applicant Pool of minority professionals," Switzer said.

"By going into southern schools I had the opportunity to help carry out a good faith effort of developing minority professionals and getting them into employment opportunities," he said.

Since the program's funding began in 1971, 64 minority students have received Ph.D. degrees at K-State, Utsey said. Presently 34 students are participating in the program at K-State.

Faulty roofs traced to manufacturers

By MIKE NASS
Collegian Reporter

In lawsuits filed Friday against 20 manufacturers and contractors alleging they provided faulty roofing materials for state buildings, the problem lies not so much with the contractors as with the manufacturers, according to David Barclay, administrative assistant to Senator Norman Gaar (R-Westwood).

Barclay headed a legislative study committee this summer which investigated construction roofing faults in dozens of state buildings.

"The roofing materials were bad," he said. "Regardless if it was put on correctly, the system was bound to fail."

IN THE PAST, 4-ply roofing materials have been used. In the faulty roofs a 2-ply material was used. The suit alleges the 2-ply was fraudulently sold as being of equal quality to the 4-ply.

Five buildings at K-State, as well as other state buildings, many on college campuses, have been plagued by the faulty system.

John Egan of Salina Roofing Inc. said he wasn't even aware his company was being sued until he heard it in the news.

"I feel it was not a proper thing for the Attorney General to turn loose information to the media before we (the defendants) knew anything about it," Egan said.

Union Stateroom gets a facelift

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Union Stateroom has a new look.

The Stateroom was remodeled over Christmas break to accommodate more people with more efficiency, according to Terry Adams, Union Food Service director.

"Trying to get too many people through the line in too short of a time is why it's been remodeled," Adams said. "At times, 2,000 people go through the lines in an hour and a half, and 6,000 to 7,000 people go through in a day."

"It wasn't expensive," Adams said about the remodeling. "I'd say it cost under $200 dollars."

The dessert and salad bars have been switched to different sides. The silverware has been moved to inside the serving area, and the cash registers have been moved further back.

Adams said he made the remodeling plans himself after taking a course in layout and management. Students in architecture also helped with the remodeling plans.

"One student in particular—John Boal—helped. He had the idea of putting the silverware inside the serving area," Adams said. "We have had 100 dozen knives and forks taken. This way we hopefully won't lose as many."

Though some food prices in the Stateroom have increased, it is not due to the remodeling, but to an increase in produce prices and the minimum wage, Adams said.

"We must generate our own income to meet expenses," Adams said. "The prices of thirty items were raised. The majority were raised five cents. The highest increase was the hot beef, which raised a dime."

"Our prices still aren't higher than anyone else in town," Adams said. "We raised the donut price from 12 cents to 14 cents, but they are still the cheapest in town."

"Our goal is service and quality at a reasonable cost," Adams said. "We try to do our part to help the students."

Salina Roofing did work on the Military Science Building, which started leaking in 1973.

"We received a letter from K-State in 1973 saying there were problems. The two-year warranty had already expired and they wanted recommendations for repair and maintenance," Egan said.

"The whole thing was done with the blessings of the state architect.

It was designed to the specifications."

SALINA ROOFING was paid only after the roof was approved by the State Inspector and the Treasurer was ordered to release the funds, Egan said.

"This is the only time in the history of the company that this has ever happened. We have always done good work and if there was a problem afterward we corrected it. It's the only way to do good business," Egan said.

The legislative study committee drafted a bill last summer that would reorganize the state architect's office and could help alleviate construction and roofing problems, Barclay said.

"Several people in the architect's office were responsible for seeing that there was acceptable quality in architecture and construction. Apparently no one did," Barclay said.

The bill before the current session of the legislature would pinpoint this responsibility to one person.

"There were complaints that the people in the architect's office weren't competent. This bill would provide an overall house cleaning. Only those that were competent would be hired back," Egan said.

New monogram to identify all K-State departments

By PAUL RHODES
Staff Writer

For the first time in K-State's history, a single symbol will be used to identify every unit of the University, regardless of its function or location in the state.

A complete University identification system, which incorporates the new symbol, became University policy Jan. 1, according to John Krider, University Publications editor.

The new symbol will be used by county and area extension units, agricultural experiment stations, athletic teams, alumni and endowment associations and all campus academic departments.

The symbol, which incorporates a "KSU" monogram and the words "Kansas State University", was developed primarily by Krider, University Publications Director Richard Hanes, and a University Publications artist.

"As far as I know, the idea for the identification system was originally President Acker's," Krider said. "When he first came to the University, he was a need for a unified look."

Krider said he and others involved with development of the identification system have been working on it for nearly a year. Development costs for the new system, which includes a usage manual that will be distributed to all department heads, totals about $4,000, he said.

"This price is a bargain when you consider what it usually costs to develop something like this," Krider said. Costs to establish the new system will also be minimal, he said.

"We're not immediately re-doing anything," he said. "Department stationery will be the first place the symbol will appear, but existing stationery supplies will be used first."

According to Krider, University departments have until Aug. 30 to use up existing stationery supplies, at which time it will become mandatory to use stationery with the new symbol.

"We want to emphasize that the new letter head is just a part of the entire system," Hanes said. "The letterheads concern the most people, however, because it is the most personal part of the system."

"It (the new system) will be a gradual change over a period of years," President Acker said.

The major costs to complete the system, will be replacement and repainting of signs.

"The new system will not only replace signs, it will make them more comprehensive," Acker said.

Changes may eventually include welcome signs and campus directory signs, Krider said. The new symbol will be incorporated on all off-campus signs, but this would take several years.

"For the first time we have an official purple," he said. "The new purple is a deeper shade of blue and seems more dignified."

The lettering chosen for the symbol plays a subtle importance, Krider said. The word "State" appears in larger type to emphasize that K-State is a land grant institution with state-wide responsibilities, he said.

* GYM = FACULTY/STAFF ONLY

NOTICE TO ALL STUDENTS, FACULTY, AND STAFF

The Recreational Services Council recently made a change in policy allowing faculty and staff (including graduate assistants) only in the gymnasium over the noon hour (11:30-12:30) Monday through Friday. This will be on a trial basis this semester January 18 through March 15, 1978, and will be reviewed at that time as to its utilization.

Formerly the noon hour was set aside for faculty only, allowing students to use the noon hour if faculty programs were not hampered. Recognizing this and upon request by faculty and staff to honor this past agreement, the Recreational Services Council has re-instituted the original policy and will allow only faculty and staff to use the gym from 11:30 a.m. until 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday. The fieldhouse, weight room, and pools will still be open for student participation over the noon hour.

Your cooperation in implementing this policy will be greatly appreciated, and should you have any questions or concerns, please discuss these with me in the Recreational Services Office.

Carter promises tax cut in address

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter presented Congress and the nation Thursday with a no-surprise State of the Union address in which he held out the promise of income tax reductions for 96 percent of all American taxpayers.

"Militarily, politically, economically, and in spirit, the state of our union is sound," Carter said in his nationally broadcast appearance at a joint session of Congress.

While saying the United States faces "no single overwhelming crisis," the president told the curtain-raising session of the 1978 Congress that, nevertheless, "profound national interests are at stake," notably in the realm of the economy.

After first again appealing for enactment of his stalled energy program, Carter sketched in broad outline a forthcoming proposal to revise and simplify the tax laws and at the same time "reduce the tax burden on American citizens by $25 billion."

"Almost $17 billion in income tax cuts will go to individuals," he said. "Ninety-six percent of American taxpayers will see their taxes go down. For a typical family of four this will mean an annual saving of more than $250—a tax reduction of about 20 percent."

CARTER also said he will submit Saturday a plan to cut federal excise taxes by $2 billion, which he said would "directly reduce the rate of inflation." In addition, he called for "strong additional incentives for business investment through substantial cuts in corporate tax rates and improvements in the investment tax credit."

Taking the wraps off the gist of a new anti-inflation program, the president restated his position to wage and price controls and said:

"I am therefore asking government, business, labor and other groups to join in a voluntary program to moderate inflation by holding wage and price increases in each sector of the economy during 1978 below the average increases of the last two years."

Carter also made a strong pitch for civil service reform and said he will call for the creation of a separate Department of Education."

Touching briefly on foreign affairs, Carter said his administration "has restored a moral basis for our foreign policy" and declared, "the world must know that in support of human rights the United States will stand firm." He went on:

"We expect no quick or easy results, but there has been significant movement toward greater freedom and humanity in several parts of the world."

REPORTING that thousands of political prisoners have been freed, he said, "the leaders of the world—even our ideological adversaries—now see that their attitude towards fundamental human rights affects their standing in the international community and their relations with the United States."

Carter expressed hope that 1978 will see the successful completion of "difficult and prolonged" negotiations with the Soviet Union on a new strategic arms limitation treaty. He called again for Senate ratification of the Panama Canal treaty and promised to press ahead with efforts to promote a Middle East peace.

Arguing that a peace opportunity in that region "may not come again in our lifetime," Carter said, "our role has been difficult and sometimes thankless and controversial, but it has been constructive and necessary—and it will continue."

Discussing his energy program, Carter said:

"We know we have to act. We know what we must do: increase energy production, cut down on waste, and use more of those fuels which are plentiful and more permanent...."

"It sounds simple, but I recognize the difficulties involved. I know it is not easy for the Congress to act."

Jack and his giant-killers break the Russians' stalk

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

The K-State basketball team did something Wednesday night that neither UCLA or Brigham Young were able to do: they defeated the Soviet Union National team.

The Wildcats, playing only one night after an uninspiring win over Oklahoma State and two nights before their looming encounter with Kansas, used a potent zone defense and the fast break to beat the squad, 57-54, before 7,110 fans in Ahearn Field House.

It was a classic case of David versus Goliath: the taller Soviet team, experienced from years of playing together, against the smaller, but faster K-State team, which is just beginning to learn how to play together.

WITH a defensive effort that hasn't been seen in the fieldhouse since the 'Cats defeated Oklahoma for the Big Eight title a year ago, Mike Evans and Curtis Redding played like heroes.

As less than 1:30 remained with K-State trailing 54-53, Evans forced a bad pass that Redding picked off and slam dunked three dribbles later. The resulting roar was one that could be heard all the way to Moscow.

After a Russian timeout that did little to stop the Russians or the building from shaking, the 'Cats clinched the game.

Guarding Stanislav Eremin,

Redding dove for the ball and sent it rolling towards the 'Cats goal. Evans scooped it up and layed in the clincher.

The Russians led, 36-32, after the first half. Earlier in the half with 10 minutes remaining, Vladimir Tkachenko, 7-4 Russian center, jammed two dunks in a row and seemed about to break the game open as he tied the score at 16-16.

HOWEVER, Steve Soldner, Jerry Black and Rolando Blackman kept fighting for rebounds and by the second half Tkachenko was frustrated and in foul trouble. K-State lost the rebounding battle 39-22, but not the war.

"I thought a lot about it, but I just tried not to look at them," Soldner said of his taller opponents.

That team attitude of playing tough and relaxed against the 7-4, 6-10, 6-10 Russian front line earned the praise of Coach Jack Hartman.

"I am really proud of my players," he said. "That's going to be one you're going to remember from an effort standpoint."

"You're playing for your country," Hartman said was a reason for his team's effort.

Four declare candidacy for student body leader

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

With student government elections less than a month away, four people have announced their candidacy for student body president at K-State.

Sam Brownback, Ted Knopp, Cindy Thomas and Stan Watt said they will file for the office. Filing deadline for student government candidates is Feb. 1. Elections will be held Feb. 15.

Brownback, junior in agriculture economics, was an agriculture senator from spring to fall of 1976 and was national vice-president of Future Farmers of America from 1976-77.

"I believe that when God created us he gave us two ears and one mouth for a reason, and we should speak and listen to student concerns in that ratio," Brownback said.

BROWNBACK said K-State students need to organize to reach state legislators to get the money the University needs to expand and build. "It is my thought that at times we have been treated as a second-rate university compared to KU," he said.

Brownback said money and its relation to student needs and wants is a top concern on campus.

Knopp, junior in agriculture economics, was an arts and sciences senator from spring 1976-77 and an agriculture senator from fall 1977-78.

"I've got the background, research and knowledge of the issues to solve the problems," he said. "I think that armed with those figures, my approach will allow me to get the job of representing the students done."

KNOPP said a new fieldhouse, parking, educational concerns and women and minority issues are some of the problems he sees on campus.

Thomas, a fifth year business student with a degree in secondary education, was an education senator from spring 1975 to fall 1976 and is currently senate chairman.

"I feel that a student body president can have the most impact to bring about changes, and I feel there are definite changes the University needs to make," Thomas said.

Begin lashes out at Egypt, rejects military negotiations

JERUSALEM (AP)—Prime Minister Menachem Begin lashed out at Egypt Thursday for "chutzpah"—brazenness—in its peace demands, and he rejected for the moment Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's proposal to resume military negotiations in Cairo this weekend.

Israel stands ready to reopen peace talks, Begin said, but the next move is "up to Egypt."

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance met with Begin and is to fly to Cairo on Friday to talk win effort to revive the Jerusalem negotiations, which were suspended abruptly by the Egyptian leader Wednesday.

After meeting with Vance, Begin told reporters Israel was declining Egypt's invitation for Defense Minister Ezer Weizman to return to Cairo Saturday for renewed talks on military aspects of a peace.

HE SAID the Israeli cabinet would await Vance's report on his Cairo visit and Sadat's scheduled speech Saturday to the Egyptian parliament before deciding Sunday on the military talks. He also said official Israeli delegations do not travel on Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath.

The Cairo talks, considered less important than the Jerusalem conference, had focused on an Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula.

Begin told a joint news conference after the meeting with Vance that the American would "try to convince President Sadat that the negotiations ... should be renewed. We wish him Godspeed and good success."

U.S. officials said Vance was urging both Begin and Sadat to end their war of words and get down to hard negotiating. The secretary himself declined to comment on this, but Begin said that if Vance's mission is successful "we shall then be prepared to refrain from public statements, of course on the basis of reciprocity."

The prime minister, speaking to a group of French Jews earlier Thursday, said it was "inconceivable" that the United States would pressure him to make concessions to Egypt.

IN CAIRO, meanwhile, Sadat heard a report from Foreign Minister Mohammed Kamel, the chief negotiator he had summoned home from Jerusalem after only two days of what were supposed to have been comprehensive talks on political aspects of a peace settlement.

Sadat, considering his next move in the fast-developing situation, rescheduled from Saturday morning to Saturday evening the emergency session of the Egyptian parliament at which he is to deliver an address.

In his speech to the French group, assembled in the Israeli parliament building, Begin said that if Egypt decides to reopen the Jerusalem talks, "the government of Israel will be prepared to do so as well."

"We hope the talks will be resumed. It is up to Egypt," he said.

Congress tackles energy and canal treaty in new session

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Congress that adjourned with energy disputes unresolved came back to them Thursday, but with tax cuts and job bills competing for its attention.

And a major item on the Senate agenda is the vote on the Panama Canal treaty giving control of the waterway back to Panama by the year 2000.

As the 95th Congress gathered for its second and final session, House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill told reporters "I am taking the liberty" of assigning first priority to legislation for economic stabilization and reduction of unemployment. That would include, he said, a tax cut designed to stimulate the economy as well as public works and other job-creating measures.

THE SENATE majority leader, Sen. Robert Byrd, (D-W.Va.), seemed to indicate a somewhat different order of importance, with agreement on an energy bill "our first major priority." But Byrd also listed economic measures as having high priority.

O'Neill rejected suggestions that the Senate-House conferees trying to break the impasse on the key issue of natural gas pricing might throw up their hands and quit.

Candidates say fieldhouse, parking are major concerns

"I think the best way to come up with solutions to problems is to talk with students, and maintaining that line of communication with the students is one of the most important things a student body president can do," she said.

THOMAS said the general area of academics is one of the most important problems on campus, and said a fieldhouse, parking, minority problems, security, rape prevention and increases in tuitions and fees are student concerns also.

Watt, senior in agriculture economics and business administration, was Union Governing Board vice-chairman from 1975-76 and Union Activities Board chairman from 1976-77.

"I'm running because I have a background for the office and I believe I can represent the students in the everyday administrative functions that are required of a student body president," Watt said.

WATT said he is interested in improving relations between student government and the student body and making student senate more effective.

A new fieldhouse and parking are some of the problems the majority of the student body is concerned with, Watt said.

Plane hijacked to Cuba

QUITO, Ecuador—Ecuadorian commercial aircraft hijacked to Cuba after leaving Quito returned here Thursday.

Aboard the Saeta Airlines were its pilot, Patricio Mosquera, five crew members and 21 passengers. All were reported in good condition.

The plane, with 60 passengers and six crew members, was hijacked 20 minutes after leaving Quito Wednesday.

Authorities said the hijackers were a man and a woman. Neither was identified. They allowed 39 passengers, including foreigners, women and children, to disembark when the plane landed for a brief stop at Guayaquil before leaving for Cuba.

Economy's record strong

WASHINGTON—The nation's economy grew at its slowest rate of the year in the fourth quarter, the government reported Thursday, but Commerce Department officials termed the full year's pace strong and likely to continue so.

Gross National Product expansion of 4.2 percent in the final quarter brought the year's average down to 4.9 percent, or only slightly below the administration's target of 5.1 percent.

Economic growth of at least 4 percent is considered necessary to keep unemployment from getting worse. Anything above that is considered likely to lead to a drop in joblessness.

Nevertheless, the decline in the rate of expansion, if continued, portends a situation the Carter administration believes necessitates a tax cut in order to avert a downturn late this year or in 1979.

Carter wants farm support

WASHINGTON—Carter claimed part of the credit Thursday for higher farm prices but said he isn't satisfied and pledged to try to improve the farm economy with a new 6-million-ton international grain reserve and efforts to increase farm exports.

Carter said he expects to pay farmers $7.3 billion in price supports during 1978 and promised to ask Congress to eliminate inconsistencies and inequities in disaster aid programs, especially those aimed at helping farmers stricken by drought.

The president also promised to:

—Increase Farmers Home Administration loans for farming, housing, community facilities and business and industrial development from $7 billion to $8 billion.

—Seek congressional ratification of the international sugar agreement his administration negotiated this year to stabilize world prices and protect domestic producers.

The Beetle is dying

EMDEN, West Germany—The last Volkswagen Beetle sedan, Nazi dictator Adolf Hitler's legacy that helped West Germans beef up their post-war economy, rolled off a German assembly line Thursday.

Since Daimler Benz made the first 30 prototype Beetles designed by Ferdinand Porsche 40 years ago, Volkswagen built 19.2 million Beetles to surpass the previous production record of 15,007,034 set by Henry Ford's Model T in the late 1920s.

The Beetle continues to be produced in Mexico, Brazil, South Africa and Nigeria. Models sold in Germany from now on will bear a "made in Mexico" tag.

West German lines are still making a limited number of Beetle convertibles in nearby Osnabrueck.

Money wasted on K-State logo

In a time when rising enrollment and inflation have put an enormous burden on the University's budget, it comes as a surprise to learn that K-State recently spent $4,000 to re-design the school's logo.

The "unified look" is intended to provide continuity for every unit of the University regardless of its location or function throughout the state. County extension units, agricultural experiment stations, athletic teams and the alumni association will be required to use the new symbol.

The logo, which will appear on all K-State stationery, signs, posters and other printed materials, was described by President Duane Acker as "reflecting the University's excellence."

Acker also contends the new logo will be "a visual identification system (that) will help people transfer their image of the University from one unit to another."

ACKER EXPLAINED that "if someone has an excellent learning experience with one of our English professors, then later enrolls in a continuing education class in Dodge City which is closely identified with K-State, that person will automatically expect the same excellent instruction."

Artist John Krider explained that the lettering portrays K-State's "rich heritage in a clean, contemporary way. Its simple, classic look should be effective for a long time."

There appears to be several flaws in this logic. For one, a school's success lies within its reputation for the education of its students, not by what its stationery looks like.

Secondly, the logo bears a striking resemblance to the logo used by the Big Eight athletic conference. If the logo represents the "University's excellence," it also demonstrates the administration's ability to copy another institution's ideas.

THE COLLEGIAN is not disturbed by the design of the logo. What is disturbing is the waste of money which easily could have been channeled to the library to remain open longer during weekends, or allow recreational services to remain open late at night.

And if the administrators still could not decide what to do with $4,000, a suggestion might be to purchase salt to help dissolve the icy, dangerous sidewalks students and faculty must navigate during the winter.

It makes one wonder whether the administration is concerned more about the students and faculty, or the stationery used to promote K-State.

The great leisure takeover

We are becoming a leisure society. Soothsayers predict that by the year 2000 (which is a meager 22 years away), we will no longer need to work or reproduce through physical contact. The world will be free from hunger, poverty and war. Our greatest enemy will be time.

We will have so much time, we won't know what to do. To prepare us for the impending crisis, the following suggestions have been forwarded by the almighty Krition. (Krition lives in a hole near the parking lot of an apartment complex. He is very shy.)

"First, we must store and hoard all raw food supplies. Canned and packaged foods will be the only available nourishment, and while these foods will be accepted by the majority of the populus, if you are really planning to rebel against forced stagnation, you must store enough wheat (unground) and corn to keep you busy through the deluge.

"BOOKS will also be obsolete. All communication will take place through the medium (which will be worshipped as a god) of television. Each house will have an average of eight televisions and offerings will be made to the mighty electronic gods every week. Books must be hoarded. Be sure to keep only paperbacks as they are easily hidden. Hardbound books are too difficult to carry," he said.

My curiosity overcame me. "Krition, how can you say that all the masterpieces of literature will be obsolete?" I asked.

"The world already is hooked on television. It is a plot. You see, the scientists who are planning the great leisure takeover already have designed a 'world system' and they plan to keep the masses satisfied with television. All intellectual curiosity will be stunted."

The Collegian welcomes letters from readers.

All letters must be signed and include the year in school, classification and the telephone number of the writer.

Because of time and space considerations, the editors reserve the right to shorten or reject material at their discretion.

Letters may be submitted (preferably typed) in either Kedzie 116 or 103.

"But, Krition, how will television stunt curiosity?"

"What scientists haven't told you is that television is addictive; the greatest opiate of the masses. No one will need to think and television is the best method of eliminating thought."

"WHAT NEXT, Krition?" I asked fearfully.

"Next, the powers will not want persons to reproduce. Only selected females will be given the right to have children. Men will be required to deposit their spermatozoa in a bank. All persons will be stripped of the hormones which create the sexual urge.

"To overcome this tragedy, all people must refuse the injections which will deaden the hormones. Men must refuse to give up their sperm. Women must refuse to hand over their hormones."

"Krition, you must be kidding. No one is going to readily give up physical contact. You're wrong."

"You don't understand. This process will be voluntary. People will be told of a deadly flu virus which they must be vaccinated against. In actuality, they will not receive flu shots, but hormone-killing inoculations," he said.

"THIS IS why we all must be aware of the impending disaster. We must become a paranoid society. Suspect everyone and everything. Television must be banned. Books should be read and re-read. Sex must be exalted. Processed food must be avoided. We have to prepare now. As a society, we tend to wait for doom to overcome us before we act. You have been warned."

Many persons passing by Krition's hole think he's a little mad. I wonder.

Students fed up with ticket system

Editor,

Although the game would have been played by the time this is printed, there seems to be a problem at the Athletic Ticket Office concerning the purchase of Russian-K-State game tickets. The problem is that K-State students need last semester's fee card to buy them. Unfortunately, most students dispose of them once they pay fees for the new semester and receive new ones. They then take them over to the ticket office only to find out they can't buy one. The reason is one ticket per student. What if you are a new student? "Well, sorry but we can't help you."

"Go find someone with an old fee card," is the only solution offered. It just doesn't seem fair. If the Athletic Ticket Office wanted to sell the remaining tickets, they should have let students indulge in the art of multiple buying. Surely, they wouldn't have minded selling out. I'm quite sure the policy of one ticket per student caused enough problems, but they didn't need to bother us further with this fee card crap.

Financial rescue application should be filed in February

By JUDY WELTSCH
Collegian Reporter

Students desiring financial assistance through Student Financial Assistance (SFA) should file applications by February 15, in order to assure the applications will be processed in time from fall semester, according to Louis Hendricks, SFA administrative assistant.

The final cut-off for filing is June 30. Processing applications takes from two to six weeks, Hendricks said.

To receive aid, students must file a University application, an American College Testing (ACT) Family Financial Statement, and be a regularly admitted student at K-State, she said.

According to James Upham, SFA associate director, more than $9 million was awarded to K-State students during the 1976-77 academic year through SFA.

"We have more applications than we can fill," Hendricks said. "We try to help most students that apply. We may make smaller awards to help more students."

APPLICATIONS go through a file clerk for proofing, are keypunched for the computer and are updated with Admissions and Records, Hendricks said. A computer run determines the student's financial need, she said.

"Most student financial aid is based on need. We hope they have some self-help, but not all students can work and go to school, too," Hendricks said. "We try not to turn a student down for financial assistance if we can find a solution to their best advantage."

SFA examines the need and circumstances of each student's application, and compiles a financial package made up of different types of financial assistance for that student, Hendricks said. Students may receive more than one type of aid, she said.

According to Hendricks, loans, grants, scholarships and work-study programs are available forms of financial assistance. Grants and scholarships are gifts to the student and loans must be repaid, she said.

Financial assistance funds may come from the federal or state government, the K-State Alumni Association, the K-State Endowment Association, or other private contributors, she said.

THE U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare offers five types of grants and loans. These are available to U.S. citizens in post-secondary institutions who are at least part-time students, Hendricks said.

Basic Educational Opportunity Grants (BEOG) are available for students to help pay costs of attending school. The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG) is awarded as aid to students with high financial need, Hendricks said.

National Direct Student Loans (NDSL) and the Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSLP) provide loans for students who need funds to meet their educational expenses. GSLP loans permit students to borrow directly from lenders, she said.

The College Work-Study Program (CWS) supplies jobs for students who must earn a portion of their educational expenses.

"A student who is a Kansas resident or an out-of-state resident attending a Kansas educational institution may apply for a State Guaranteed Student Loan," Hendricks said.

According to Hendricks, the Alumni Association loans provide a maximum of $1,000 to regularly enrolled student show have established one semester at K-State.

"Scholarships are a combination of endowed funds made up from personal donors," she said.

Ford tops the list of Landon series

Former President Gerald Ford will join Malcolm Forbes and Milton Friedman as this semester's Landon Lecturers.

Forbes, president and editor-in-chief of Forbes magazine, will be the first Landon Lecturer. He will speak Tuesday, Jan. 24, at 10:30 a.m. at McCain Auditorium on "Where We're At and Where We're Headed."

Ford will appear February 20 at Ahearn Field House and Friedman, a Nobel prize winner in economics, will speak April 27 at McCain. Topics for Ford and Friedman's lectures have not been announced.

Landon Lecturers are chosen by Barry Flinchbaugh, assistant to the president, with President Acker's approval.

Honorariums for the speakers are provided through private donations, according to Carolyn Reich, Flinchbaugh's secretary.

Speakers for this semester's University Convocations will be announced later this week, according to John Lilley, chairman of the Convocation committee.

'Old soldiers' go to class, but feel left out of activities

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

General Douglas MacArthur once said "Old Soldiers never die; they just fade away." Today some of them go to college.

There are currently about 1,100 veterans enrolled at K-State. Some are single, many are married and some have children but the veterans who are usually older than the average student don't always feel a part of the university community.

"You're older than your classmates and you're kind of caught in the middle," according to Dan Plunkett, Vietnam veteran and junior in education.

"You want to go out and boogie with the other kids, but you're older and have more commitments, especially if you're married," he said.

LARRY MOEDER, Veteran's Affairs Office coordinator, agreed with Plunkett.

Most vets don't feel a part of the student body because most social activities and organizations, including the Greek system, are geared toward the younger-age group, Moeder said.

Plunkett said the Aggieville scene is also geared to the younger crowd and clubs like Kennedy's Claim are too expensive for the veteran's income.

"We could get a lot of things accomplished if the veterans would get together more," Plunkett said.

"But you run into problems with this because a lot of them are working, a lot of them are married and have other commitments."

Plunkett said it would be helpful if some of the fraternities and other campus groups would include veterans in some of their activities and help them get to know more people on campus.

"The veterans do have some get-togethers every now and then, but they've really gone downhill since I've been here," Plunkett said.

A PRIMARY reason veterans return to school appears to be the veteran's financial assistance benefits under the G.I. Bill, Moeder said.

Under the G.I. Bill, a single veteran attending college full time receives $311 a month while in school. If he has one dependent, he will receive $370 a month, $422 with two dependents, and $26 more for each additional dependent.

David Parr, a veteran and counselor at the Veteran's Affairs Office, said he couldn't afford college, so he enlisted, planning to use the G.I. Bill after military service.

Moeder said he did not plan to go to college after being in the service but ended up doing so because of the benefits.

The job market is a big factor in veterans coming back to school, and veterans know a college degree is necessary to compete for jobs, he said.

Film a tasty touch of the Python bite

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Monty Python Meets Beyond the Fringe," will be shown Friday and Saturday 21 at 7 and 9:30 p.m. and Sunday at 7 p.m. in Forum Hall. Admission price is $1.25.

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

Monty Python has given up his search for the Holy Grail and has gone "beyond the fringe" to bring us a series of typical Python sketches. They should warm the souls of K-State Python lovers.

Few hard core Python addicts will be disappointed by "Monty Python Meets Beyond the Fringe."

Collegian Review

There are examples of great sketches and thoroughly dull ones.

The sketch which exemplifies irony concerns a woman who parodies a typical "and I'd like to thank the following people" type speech.

This sketch is close enough to reality to be funny and fresh things keep cropping up.

When the mistress of ceremonies goes so far as to mention that she is glad to see so many young people in the live audience because it proves that not all young people are out for a good time, the film approaches brilliance.

Sadly that flash of genius is not maintained throughout the entire film.

Several scenes were just dull, due to the fact that some jokes referred to things only a Briton would be acquainted with.

All in all, the film was fair. It would have been better had it been shorter. Even Python humor gets old after the initial bite.

IF MEN COULD FLY...Mike Evans applies defensive pressure on 6-10 Anatoliy Mishkin of the Soviet National team during the first half of last night's basketball game.

Local prep stars Jankovich, Favrow to become Wildcats

Tim Jankovich, a 1977 All-State guard from Manhattan High School, who played for Washington State during the fall semester has transferred to K-State.

The 6-0 Jankovich started half the games for Washington State this year averaging between seven and eight points a game.

Jankovich said the Washington State team was too "big man orientated" and that the guards were "inhibited."

"When I came out here I had certain ideas that didn't materialize," Jankovich said in a phone interview from his Washington State dorm room where he is finishing up finals.

"I found that it wasn't the way I thought it would be," he said. "I feel my future looks a lot better at K-State."

Jankovich said that he would more than likely sit out all of next year, instead of playing when he becomes eligible in January so he would have three full years of eligibility.

Also transferring to K-State this semester is Jim Favrow, another 1977 Manhattan High graduate and track standout who was on a track scholarship at Texas Tech.

During his senior year at Manhattan, Favrow was the Class 4-A indoor shot put champ and won both the discus and shot put competition in the 4-A outdoor meet.

Favrow will become eligible for competition next January.

Former Redskin coach Allen calls team president a 'Jekyll and Hyde'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bitter George Allen, fired abruptly as coach and general manager of the Washington Redskins by team President Edward Bennett Williams, bid farewell to his assistants Thursday after viciously criticizing the man who released him.

As the Redskins began a search for a successor to the most successful coach in Washington history, Allen called Williams "devious, deceitful and a Jekyll and Hyde."

Allen attended the funeral of Redskins controller Chester Minter, who died Sunday, on Thursday morning and then went to Redskins Park, the magnificent plant he created near Dulles International Airport, to talk with his assistant coaches, several of whom are being mentioned as taking over the reins of the Redskins.

WILLIAMS said again that he was convinced Allen was negotiating with the Los Angeles Rams even though Allen had agreed, but had not signed, a four-year extension of his contract calling for a reported $250,000 a year.

"I believed we had an agreement in July," Williams said. "We had agreed to all terms. I then sought to get a signed contract and did not get one."

"I finally told him that the club was being seriously prejudiced by the paralysis it was in from not knowing where we were going next year," Williams continued. "I had exhaustive meetings with him in the last 10 days and I told him I would have to start talking to someone else if we couldn't come to an agreement by last Saturday. I never received a call from him. I called him on Monday and told him I couldn't wait any longer.

Allen denied he had talked to the Rams, although he said he would only consider jobs in Washington and Los Angeles, where he was head coach before coming to the nation's capital in 1971.

"I always thought this would be my last coaching job," said Allen. "To say that I've been thinking about going to the Rams is untrue and inaccurate. I don't have any job with the Rams. My first choice has always been the Redskins."

WILLIAMS said he would seek "the best coach I can get" to replace Allen, splitting the duties of head coach and general manager between two men.

Women defeated by UNLV; prepare for busy weekend

The K-State women's basketball team fell victim to the explosive Nevada-Las Vegas Lady Rebels team in a 113-84 defeat late Wednesday night in opening their three-game west coast road trip.

The 'Cats found themselves trailing the undefeated Lady Rebels at halftime 62-40 and could not shut off Nevada-Las Vegas' 5-11 center Belinda Candler, who led all scorers with 35 points.

Laurie Miller, playing in her first game since suffering a knee injury in the Big Eight tournament, shared 'Cat scoring honors with Eileen Feeney, both tallying 18 points.

Other 'Cats scoring in double figures were, Beth Boggs with 14, Kristi Short 12, and Gayla Williams added 10.

THE LOSS dropped the 'Cats record to 9-9 while the Lady Rebels moved their record to 13-0.

The 'Cats now prepare to play the UCLA Bruins in Los Angeles tonight and will take on the California State-Long Beach 49ers tomorrow night in Long Beach.

THE INGENIOUS PRANK . . . This banner unfurled from the scoreboard in Allen Fieldhouse in 1965. It is remembered as one of the best pranks of the K-State-KU rivalry.

Memories remain of infamous prank

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

On the eve of yet another intrastate clash, many exciting moments in K-State vs. Kansas University basketball history come to mind.

Wildcat fans remember the close games, the upsets and three Wildcat wins out four games last year. But more than the actual games, Wildcat fans remember the pranks that keep the rivalry intense.

Who put purple dye in the fountain in Lawrence and who stole the wildcat from Sunset Zoo? Purple chickens are almost traditional. Red and blue paint in Manhattan and purple paint all over Lawrence are not uncommon sights.

Most K-State students and alumni have fond memories of the pranks from their college years. Ron Paradis, WIBW sports director and former K-State basketball player, is no exception.

PARADIS had just reported to the scorer's table to enter the game. The native Topekan said he always got a big response from the crowd in Lawrence because a good friend and high school teammate of his played for KU and he was familiar to the crowd.

As he prepared to check into the game, Paradis recalls the whole place went crazy. Realizing the applause was not just for him, Paradis joined everyone else in the packed fieldhouse looking up into the rafters watching huge banners slowly unfurl, and cover the entire scoreboard.

"Go Cats Kill Snob Hill Again" were the words on the banners which sent the crowd into an uproar.

AFTER a long delay to decide what to do, the game continued, but the players couldn't see the scoreboard for the rest of the half.

"Since K-State was being killed by KU anyway at that point, we didn't mind so much," Paradis said.

At halftime the signs were lowered and removed.

"Everyone got a kick out of it," Paradis said. "It was hard to get upset. KU coach Ted Owens and former K-State head coach Tex Winter were both giggling about it," he said.

Barton believes K-State can knock off rival Jayhawks

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

Wildcat guard Fred Barton says he believes the Wildcats will beat KU Saturday.

"We'll have to play good defense and play together well as a team," Barton said, "but I think we can do it."

Barton, a sophomore in business, was outstanding as a prepster. He averaged 23 points (with a high of 42), seven assists, and three steals per game his senior year at Edwardsville High School in Edwardsville, Ill. He was named to the St. Louis All-Metro East first team, and participated in the Illinois Coaches High School All-Star Classic. In high school Barton also played tennis, baseball and football. He ran cross-country and was on a swim team for nine years.

"I love basketball," Barton said. "It's always been part of my life."

BARTON said he comes from a very athletic family and he is very close to them.

"My dad played for Washington University in St. Louis," he said.

"My dad is an inspiration to me. He's a great guy. He's always behind me and he's one of my best fans."

Barton said he didn't play much last season because he wasn't ready.

"You might say I was green," he said. "My ball handling was weak and there's a lot more pressure in college than in high school."

Barton said he stayed in Manhattan last summer and worked on his ball handling and quickness. He practiced about five hours each weekday and played basketball with Chuckie Williams and Mike Evans.

"If you play with someone better than you, you're bound to do better."

"He's forgotten more about basketball than most people ever learn," Barton said of coach Jack Hartman.

"He is fair to all the players. He keeps discipline with the team and he knows what he wants. He's always right, and he keeps the pressure on you."

Barton said he knows what Hartman wants to accomplish in practice.

"I've learned to filter out the yelling and adjectives and use the constructive criticism," Barton said.

People's Grocery: cooperation and lower prices

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

The wooden shelves are stacked with jars of herbs, teas and spices. Sacks filled with cereal and seed crowd each other in the corner. A worker fattens a limp bag on a scale and adds it to the rest.

The People's Grocery Cooperative Exchange has operated as a natural food cooperative for the last 2½ years at 811 Colorado.

The cooperative, which was started as a food buying club, has about 1,000 people involved and about 200 member households, according to Pam Scalora, store manager.

"A co-op is a political statement in their life—they can have a direct say about it."

To become a member, one must pay a $10 entrance fee.

"With the $10 membership, people buy a piece of stock in the company," Scalora said. "This enables ten people per household to be eligible for the membership."

Members take advantage of lower prices because some of them contribute time to working in the store.

"You're paying 20 percent less here because we have working members," William Girard, a working member, said. "All other stores have a mark-up of 40 percent. Buying in bulk is a lot cheaper than (buying) in supermarkets."

WORKERS recycle bags, bottle their own oils and honey and have local people bring in produce during the summer.

Members pay different prices according to their classification. Working members who contribute two hours per month pay 20 percent above wholesale; non-working members pay 30 percent and non-members pay 40 percent above wholesale cost. Items are marked with all three prices.

Kitty Causey, a high school student on work-study with People's, said the types of foods sold most often are raisins, dried fruits, nuts, unrefined flour, yogurt, Kefir (buttermilk and yogurt) and assorted natural flavor juices.

Many college students and older persons frequent the store and added that older people are really into health foods, she said.

"Older persons buy corn meal, nuts, honey and juices. There's a lady who lives across the street and buys bran; she's real sweet," Causey said.

THE social scene at People's is "friendly—sort of like an old-fashioned store," she said.

"Most people come here with the same interest—they want to be healthy. And sometimes, we swap recipes."

The name, "People's Grocery," was chosen at one of the pot luck suppers where can members bring guests. Everyone at People's has a good time and learns from each other, according to Carol Love.

"I'm thankful because of the store's availability of natural health foods and herbs, reasonable prices, my own work responsibility and all of the people pitching in," Love said.

Indian permits question unclear

TOPEKA (AP)—The state has no objection to exempting Indians from having to buy hunting and fishing permits as long as it's clear who is an Indian and who is not, according to a spokesman for the Forestry, Fish and Game Commission.

Fred Warders, assistant director, admitted Thursday many times he's not sure.

Warders told the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee that the commission in the past has excused Indians from buying a permit if they could produce some proof of their ancestry. He complained the proof sometimes has been flimsy.

A bill before the committee would make it state law, not just agency policy, that Indians be exempted from having to buy permits to hunt, fish or trap in Kansas. As proof, they would have to present "a certificate of degree of Indian blood by the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

Warders said such a document can be little more than a piece of paper with Bureau of Indian Affairs handwritten across the top "and signed by somebody, we don't know who." He said he's not even certain the bureau has a state headquarters in Kansas.

"I mean where is the Bureau of Indian Affairs?" he asked the committee. "I understand there used to be a man named Carson at Horton, but there are offices all around. I suppose they have them every place you have a tribe hanging around."

Matlack proposes fee increase, new facility

By CHRIS WILLIAMS
Editor

Student Body President Terry Matlack has proposed the construction of a $10 million all-purpose facility that would house the men's and women's basketball teams at K-State, with $3 million of the costs supplemented by a $10 increase in student fees for full-time students, $5 for part-time students.

The proposal also suggests the Kansas legislature allocated $3 million for the project with the remaining $4 million coming from gifts and donations.

The proposal, if approved by student senate, would appear as a referendum on the Feb. 15 general elections.

A fee increase to begin during the fall 1978 semester is called for in the proposal, with construction of the facility to begin in 1981 and June 1, 1983 selected as a projected completion date.

The $10 increase would be applied toward the retirement of 30-year bonds for the construction of the facility with the increase assessed until the bonds are retired.

In the event the state and Endowment Association are unable to raise their shares for the facility, student fees would be reduced by $10. The assessments collected prior to this date would be placed in the SGA account. The SGA would then conduct a referendum in the fall of 1980 to determine the appropriate allocation for the fees collected to that date.

Matlack said he believed it was necessary for the student body to take the initiative to let the administrators and legislators know of their desire for a new facility.

"This is an opportunity for the students to finally express themselves about a new facility," he said. "The issue seems to be sitting on dead-center."

"It (the $3 million) is a substantial contribution and it's one that takes a large first step. Everyone knows money talks."

Doyen proposes state study for the Nichols Gym problem

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

TOPEKA—Nichols Gym may have a chance.

State Senator Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) plans to ask the Senate Ways and Means Committee for $50,000 to start preliminary planning for the renovation of Nichols.

If Doyen's proposal remains in that committee's final report it must then be approved by the Senate as a whole, a Senate-House conference committee and, finally, by Governor Robert Bennett.

Doyen said he discussed his proposals with the governor and Bennett "wasn't overly enthused" about the project.

"We normally take what the Regents ask for," Doyen said, but added that some projects would not get done if the legislature didn't take the initiative. He said that Nichols has stood "rather nude" for nine years and he was "anxious to get something done."

DOYEN, president of the Kansas Senate, has outlined five proposals for Nichols, including two that would raze the structure. The options and estimated costs are:

—Build within Nichols walls approximately 60,000 square feet of space to consolidate and house the departments of Computer Science and Statistics, the Computing Center, the Data Processing Center and classrooms for the College of Business Administration at an estimated cost of $5 million.

Israel jumps ship as peace talks stall on question of troop pullout

JERUSALEM (AP)—The 2½-month-old Egyptian-Israeli peace drive, caught in a crosscurrent of distrust and bitterness, came to a virtual standstill Sunday as Israel decided to suspend the talks on troop pullback in the Sinai Peninsula.

See related story, p. 2

The Israeli Cabinet met for 3½ hours and voted not to rejoin the Cairo talks, which had begun earlier this month after the Christmas day summit meeting of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin in Ismailia, Egypt.

The Israeli action, coupled with Egypt's withdrawal last Wednesday from parallel political talks in Jerusalem, brought the peace campaign started by Sadat last November to its lowest ebb, and it seemed to leave the United States with the task of trying to resuscitate the talks.

THAT JOB appeared to fall to U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, who arrived here Saturday for talks aimed at persuading both sides to rein in their rhetoric and resume serious negotiations.

Begin, reading a statement to reporters, left room for later resumption of the Cairo talks and the Defense Ministry said there were no plans to recall lower-level Israeli military officials already in the Egyptian capital for the negotiations.

Begin indicated Egypt would first have to soften the tone of its public statements.

Strike puts dents in farmers' wallets

By NANCY HORST
Staff Writer

After 12 years of making a living as a farmer, the thought of giving it up is distressing.

Jerry Luthi, a Leonardville farmer, and his family know the feeling, but they aren't about to give up without a fight.

Luthi farms 450 acres and raises some cattle to support his wife, Marilyn, and two children, Beth Ann, 7, and Jerrilyn, 2. Although Luthi is not in serious financial trouble now, the current farm situation has put his family in "a terrible financial bind."

LUTHI said if farm prices don't decrease or the cost of production doesn't increase, he may be able to stay on the farm two more years.

"I don't think we'll show a profit (this year) period," Luthi said.

Luthi does have something to fall back on—a small electric business which he runs out of his home. He said he could go to town and work as an electrician for $12 an hour, pay off all of his debts and still live comfortably.

"Without that, we couldn't live here on this farm and make a living," he said.

BOTH he and his wife were raised on the farm and it is the life they love. Luthi also likes the freedom of the farm instead of the routine 8 to 5 work day.

Luthi doesn't expect his financial situation to improve until the government guarantees farmers 100 percent parity for farm products and the huge grain surpluses are gone.

He says farmers are not asking for price supports from the government but a cost of living increase through parity prices. They are asking for legislation making it illegal to buy or sell farm products for less than 100 percent TOUGH TIMES... Jerry Luthi of Leonardville has cast his sympathies with the farmers in their nationwide strike, and has paid the price by tightening his belt. While holding his 2-year-old daughter, Jerrilyn, his face reflects the economic woes which have befallen his family.

Arab hard-liners join moderates in lashing U.S. peace talk participation

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—Arab hard-liners and moderates alike sharply criticized the United States Sunday following the break-off in Egyptian-Israeli peace talks and some looked toward Washington for the next move in the Mideast deadlock.

"It is up to (the) Americans now to speak the world," said the Saudi Arabian daily newspaper Al-Riyadh, echoing Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's appeal in a speech Saturday for a massing of public opinion against Israel.

A Kuwaiti newspaper called for reactivation of the Arab oil weapon.

The conservative Arab monarchies of the Persian Gulf refrained from open attacks on Sadat's solo peace initiative, saving their editorial censure for the United States, which was accused of failing to extract sufficient concessions from Israel.

"If it (the United States) wants to be a friend of the countries in the area that are not influenced by Russia, then it must break the hand that insists on aggression and usurpation, using American supplied rifles," Al-Riyadh said, referring to Israel.

KUWAIT'S Al-Siyassah newspaper said the United States "is secretly shuffling the cards for an international game that will involve the Middle East and Red Sea areas."

The Al-Rai Al-Am newspaper of Kuwait said the Arab oil states should launch a joint initiative "now that it is confirmed that Israel and America want a peace that would enslave the Arabs."

"The whip of Arab oil must be reactivated now to remind the world that Arab oil countries have offered many concessions and have frozen oil prices hoping the world will back the just peace in the Middle East.

K-State professor dead at age 99

William Wesley Crawford, emeritus professor of civil engineering, died Sunday morning at age 99 at St. Mary's Hospital.

Crawford joined the K-State faculty in 1923 and retired in 1948. He is survived by his wife, the former Naomi Zimmerman, of Manhattan.

The body will lie in state at the Parkview Funeral Home prior to being transported to Iowa for burial.

Proposal may save fire-gutted Nichols —Build within Nichols walls approximately 60,000 square feet of space to house an art gallery, visitors center, conference center, Continuing Education, Alumni Association and Endowment Association, also at an estimated cost of $5 million.

—Build within Nichols walls approximately 60,000 square feet of space to house an art gallery (20,000 square feet) and studio and teaching space for the department of art. Estimated cost: $4 million.

—Raze Nichols walls and build an art gallery and parking for visitors on the site; 20,000 square feet for $1 million.

—Raze Nichols walls and add additional parking for McCain Auditorium on the site at an estimated cost of $300,000.

The cost of razing the walls only is estimated at $150,000.

K-STATE President Duane Acker said in a prepared statement that "it is important that such a project not delay...construction projects being sought by the Board of Regents."

Morris resigns as director of Drug Education Center

Jeff Morris, director of the Drug Education Center, said he will resign Feb. 1 because of conflicts between his work and attending college.

Morris, who has worked with the drug center for the past three years and has been director since June, said he has been unable to take a full load of classes while working at the center.

THE availability of qualified replacements from within the drug center made it easier for him to resign, Morris said.

"I feel that the quality of the potential applicants for the job will be at an all time high right now. I know several people I would feel good about turning the job over to," he said.

Morris said he would not resign his position as director of social services and would continue to work with the drug center as a volunteer.

"I hope to be one of the more active volunteers. I couldn't completely leave the center after all this," he said.

Stacy Norris, chairman of Student Senate Personnel Selection Committee, said the committee would begin advertising for a new director in a few weeks.

Pardons for Wilmington 10

RALEIGH, N.C.—Gov. James Hunt will go on statewide television today to announce a decision on pardoning or reducing the sentences of the Wilmington 10, whose case has drawn attention internationally and become politically volatile at home.

The case of those charged in a firebombing during a 1971 racial disturbance puts the first-term Democratic governor between international opinion and his constituency at home.

Amnesty International, which last year won the Nobel Peace Prize, has called the Wilmington 10 "prisoners of conscience." The Soviet government has cited the case as an example of human rights violations in the United States, the East German press has sent representatives to North Carolina to report on the case and rallies have been held in Paris and East European cities as well as the United States in support of the defendants.

'Sesame Street' criticized

ROME—"Sesame Street", the world's most popular children's program, makes its debut on Italian television today—and program directors are braced for criticism.

In a country where one in every three persons voted Communist in the last national election, the commercialism associated with the program here and its Madison Avenue-style teaching techniques are expected to anger leftists.

The U.S.-produced program, which has spread to some 90 countries in the past decade, will go under the title "Open Sesame" in the Italian version, and Ernie and Bert will be rebaptized "Ernesto e Berto."

The hour-long shows familiar to millions of American kids have been boiled down to triweekly half-hour segments. The stress on letters and numbers remains, but most of the social comment has been cut as too specific to the United States.

Weapons report dubious

BEIRUT, Lebanon—Western diplomatic sources said Sunday they doubted the accuracy of reports that Syria has received new and highly sophisticated weapons from the Soviet Union.

They responded to a report in As Safir, a leftist Beirut newspaper, that Russia has supplied Syria with the newest MIG fighter planes available, SAM missiles, tanks and other military hardware.

Western sources said they didn't think the arms deliveries had been made and were skeptical the equipment was as sophisticated as claimed.

As Safir said the weapons, including "several hundred" improved versions of Soviet T-62 tanks, were designed to boost Syria's defense against a possible surprise attack by Israel across the Golan Heights or into southern Lebanon.

Tax cut lowers deductions

WASHINGTON—President Carter, while calling for income tax reductions, is asking Congress to take away deductions for state and local gasoline, sales and personal property taxes and to reduce the allowance for medical expenses.

But even with those changes, the Carter administration says, the president's total program proposals would mean lower taxes for virtually all taxpayers earning less than $100,000 a year.

When the tax cuts and the reduced deductions are combined, the effect would be to lower the tax bill of a typical $10,000-a-year, four-member family by $312; at the $20,000 level, the cut would be $270. A single person earning $10,000 would pay $34 less; the $25,000 earner would realize a $245 reduction.

Sadat talks of war

Egypt and Israel are once again talking of war, despite the efforts of U.S. peace negotiators.

Unfortunately for all concerned, the tireless efforts of U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Asst. Secretary of State Alfred Atherton are going down the drain — and the blame lies mainly with U.S. policies on arms sales to both Israel and Egypt.

Saturday Egyptian President Anwar Sadat told the Egyptian parliament that there is "hopelessness in our breasts" and that the uncompromising attitude of the Israelis is a result of U.S. arms sales to Israel.

SADAT SAID that because of the "limitless arsenal" the U.S. has shipped to Israel, "a person like Begin (Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel) does not need the recognition of Egypt."

Responding to Israeli insistence on keeping 20 Jewish settlements in the Sinai Peninsula, Sadat repeated threats of war that he had issued to Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman in December.

"If you are serious about this, please tell Begin that I will not allow a single settlement or give up a square inch of my land even if this requires that I fight you to the ends of the earth," Sadat told Weizman.

"I SAY THE door to peace is still open," Sadat said, "but on one condition, no treading on sovereignty or on land, here or there."

Sadat is now asking the United States for the same kinds and quantities of weapons that Israel is allowed to buy. U.S. policy has been to sell Egypt only small quantities of weapons.

If the U.S. grants Sadat his arms requests and adds even more weaponry to Egypt's Soviet-equipped arsenal, it must consider the effect that arms escalation may have on the shaky peace that now exists.

The U.S. should stop arms shipments to both Israel and Egypt, however profitable it is to American war industries, and let the Mideast countries settle their own problems.

Crazy, lazy creativity

Strange people can be found almost anywhere. It's enlightening when they are willing to account for their strangeness.

A Canadian friend comes to mind when I think of strange first encounters. His opening statement was that he had just returned from a three-day jaunt to Kashmir, Tokyo and the Scottish highlands—and he didn't fly.

Taking into account the limitations of modern travel, I smirked until he explained he had been indulging in a fantasy. A stickler would have asked him, "Why?" Then, "Ah-ha! Disillusioned? Goofing off? Running from reality? What are you afraid of?"

CONFESS, all of you name-dropping fantasizers. Fantasizing is born most often out of egoism and a desire for fun; it isn't always a psychological cry for help.

We are all trying to progress in our realities, but the appetite of the human ego is sometimes more ravenous than that of the mind, although its needs are also cerebral.

Shafted (again)

Editor,

"Our goal is service and quality at a reasonable cost," Adams said. "We try to do our part to help the students." This is one of the statements given by Terry Adams, Union Food Service director, and published by the Kansas State Collegian on Thursday, Jan. 19, 1978.

"Though some food prices in the Statetoom have increased, it is not due to the remodeling, but to an increase in produce prices and the minimum wage," Adams said.

Yet the price of water has doubled since last semester. The price of ONE cup of hot water has increased from zero a year ago, to five cents last semester, to 10 cents this semester.

"Our prices still aren't higher than anyone else in town," Adams said.

Thank you, Terry Adams, for providing service and quality at a reasonable cost (lower than anyone in town), and for doing your part to help the students get the shaft once again. Thank you.

Kimberly Thompson
Senior in architectural engineering

When reality doesn't provide food enough to satisfy the gut of egoism or drink enough to quench its thirst, people must move on the stores of the imagination. We buy fulfillment in a kaleidoscopic warehouse of fantasies. (The price is usually minimal if desires remain remote. It may go up, however, if the fantasizer loses control.)

Everyone fantasizes, with the beginnings usually rooted in childhood. Remember how parents laughed when you played doctor. They didn't know you were performing open heart surgery and that the life of the girl-next-door was in your grubby little hands.

OR IN adolescence when you spent hours preparing for a date. Only you knew some Pacinian or Hudsonian face was picking you up at eight. And they thought you were only going to the movies with that funny-looking kid from your geography class.

Now you're all grown up and fantasizing is considered, at worst, an escape from the realities of life. Men of letters hum-haw it while housewives are seduced by it. Only college students are exempt from the bad labels. It's considered in character for them to fantasize and daydream. At worst, they are called crazy and lazy; at best, creative.

Although the classroom seems to be the favorite place for fantasy, travelling better affords itself to the imagination of the collegiate fantasizer. Whether on the highways or airways, just think of all the people you've been and the places you've visited. If your friends could have seen you then.

In the classroom, you can't escape the sting of a glance, but on the road you can relax. Travelling means taking time off from the tenacity of bills, brooms and beans, and planting your energy in the fertility of the imagination.

THE change-of-identity fantasy is most popular. Students tend to enjoy being someone famous, ranging from movie stars to something more creative, like Adolph Hitler's forgotten son. They also enjoy pretending to be a professional in their major course of study.

Then there's the destination fantasy. Who wants to go simply to Los Angeles when it's more fashionable to fly to Toronto, Tokyo or Saudi Arabia.

The fantasy of the absurd is to imagine oneself as an inanimate object, like the subway weirdo in New York who pretended he was a toilet seat in use. It's a challenge to totally disorient oneself from the environment.

When the brown slush and new classes grow boring (and travel is out of the question), the diversion of interior drama shall increase in popularity on college campuses nationwide, not to mention suburban households. It's strongest in the fall and winter, but subsides in the spring. After all, what could possibly compete with spring fever?

Letters to the editor

Fan speaks out against 'Big Daddy'

Editor,

Jack Hartman may be a very good basketball coach, but I have to question some of his tactics.

Sometimes I feel Coach Hartman's player selection is not the wisest.

Basketball is supposed to be a game of confidence. Coach Hartman seems to intimidate his players more so than helping them achieve self-confidence. How many times do you see a player hesitate to take an open shot for fear that if he misses 'Big Daddy' is going to scream at him and bench him?

DOES COACH Hartman really need to stand up and scream at a player in front of 11,000 fans for making a bad pass? The players are of a high enough caliber to know when they have made a mistake. If Coach Hartman feels he needs to talk to a player he should pull him off to the side and speak to him in a more pleasant tone. I can recall when Scott Langton scored 34 points against a good team during a junior varsity game. Why can't we get one-third of that from him now?

Our team has good shooters and tremendous quickness. Why doesn't Coach Hartman turn our team loose once in a while? Our ball control offense is sluggish and produces few points. It also gives the opposing team time to set up its defense. Because of our size, this makes offensive rebounding that much harder.

I sympathize with the players because I realize their potential.

Kansas farmers join march on capitol, demand parity

By CONNIE STRAND
Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON—In between the "Hundred Percent Parity" and "Farmers On Strike" placards at the national farmers rally on the steps of the nation's capitol Thursday was one note of humor.

The sign read, "At present prices, Dolly Parton could be flat busted" and underneath the slogan, in smaller letters, was "Kansas."

A.J. Schmitz, a Marshall County farmer and bearer of the sign, doesn't have much else to laugh about. He and other members of an advanced group of Kansas farmers have joined about 4,000 American farmers who have donned American Agriculture Movement feedcaps and are stomping up and down the halls of congressional office buildings lobbying for higher farm prices.

They are asking for 100 percent parity—a guarantee that agricultural product prices will increase to justify increases in production and living costs.

"I believe the consumers themselves think that we could get 100 percent parity, but the Congress doesn't," Schmitz said.

SCHMITZ traveled to Washington by train and said he talked to urban citizens en route who were supportive of the farm strike. The problem, according to Schmitz and Marshall County farmers Jerry Hudke and Bob Blaser, is convincing urban legislators to support a bill providing 100 percent parity.

"We're a little alarmed that the urban legislators don't understand the farmers," Lyman David, Norton County farmer said. "We need to relate to them that our prosperity is also theirs."

David said he expects more than 700 Kansas farmers to join the nationwide AAM lobbies over the weekend, and that Kansas farmers will keep coming to Washington "until we get parity."

If the farmers don't get any signs of action from Congress toward their goal, they're prepared to begin plowdown—or plow under—their crops, according to a group of Norton County farmers.

"There's a positive attitude back home for phase one—30 percent plowdown," one farmer said. "If that doesn't work, we'll go to 50 percent."

THE NORTON County farmers said K-State economists are off base when they say 100 percent parity cannot be obtained.

"They tell us it cost $3.50 a bushel to produce wheat and then turn around and tell us to sell it at $2.45," one farmer said. "Surely it doesn't take an economist to say that."

Group members said they are disgruntled because K-State agriculture officials follow Kansas Farm Bureau policies, which are not in line with those of AAM.

Leonardville woman killed in Riley County gun battle

A Leonardville woman was shot and killed by Riley County police late Saturday night after she fired several rifle shots at them.

Sondra Glazner, 25, was shot once in the chest after she ignored a warning to drop her gun and pointed it at the officers.

Alvin Johnson, assistant director of the Riley County Police Department (RCPD), said Inspector Dana Kyle and Patrolman Dale Farmer were called to the Tropics Recreation, a Leonardville tavern, about 10 p.m. where Glazner was reported to have threatened patrons with a .22 caliber rifle.

When Kyle and Farmer arrived she had left but they located her about 4 miles west of Randolph through her CB transmissions.

Johnson said when the officers found Glazner's pickup who got out and pointed the gun in their direction.

Kyle and Farmer tried to persuade Glazner to drop the weapon. She responded by firing at them.

She backed down the road continuing to fire as she walked and Kyle and Farmer followed.

The officers then returned to Glazner's pickup, disabled it and took up position behind it.

She reappeared momentarily and walking toward the truck, began firing again.

Again, the officers tried to persuade her to disarm and fired a warning shot. She pointed the gun at Kyle and he fired four times hitting Glazner once in the upper chest.

Pakistan intelligence halts K-State professor's study

By PHYLLIS GROTH
Collegian Reporter

The government of Pakistan put a padlock on the research of William Richter, associate professor of political science at K-State, when he was asked to leave the country last November while studying the nation's election processes.

Richter said he was apparently observed with suspicion by Pakistani intelligence forces as he interviewed Pakistani political officials for a research project.

The direct order to leave the country came in a registered letter his wife received while he was lecturing in another part of the country, Richter said.

The letter, he said, instructed him that he and his family had 24 hours to leave the country.

With the help of the American consul in Pakistan, Richter said he was able to receive a two-week extension to prepare for the departure.

EARLIER, he said, his request for a visa extension, usually a routine matter, had been denied.

Richter said the suspicion probably stemmed from interviews he conducted with politicians who were supporters of Pakistan's former government leaders. The interviews, he said, were part of the research he was doing in the country.

"The research process is not understood in Pakistan," Richter said.

William Richter

Other things besides the interviews may have also aroused government suspicion, he said.

"One point at which I felt uneasy was when I was traveling from Bahawalpur City (where he did most of his research) going south," Richter said.

RICHTER was being escorted by a landowner who was still active politically with the former Pakistan government supporters, he said.

"We were stopping and meeting other politicians along the way," he said. "In one town, where police had fired on crowds a few months before, killing several people, we found ourselves surrounded by a crowd."

Richter said as the two of them walked toward their destination, the crowd grew. Tension was everywhere, he said.

"I became part of a procession," he said, "and processions were not allowed, so the crowd became more uneasy."

Richter said his language research may have created further government hostility, since Pakistan's language groups are also separate political groups.

The Pakistan government seemed to suspect Richter of favoring one group whose language he was studying, he said. This particular group, Richter said, had tried unsuccessfully to set up its own state.

Hijacker labeled healthy

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP)—Two doctors said Sunday they could find nothing physically wrong with a Pakistani army deserter who hijacked an airliner and demanded $2 million for cancer treatment.

Pakistani security police said the man, Nazir Mohammad, now says he suffered from "sexual anxiety" because he was out of work and therefore unable to go through with a marriage arranged two years ago.

After examining Mohammad in jail, the doctors said they could find no sign of physical ailments and have recommended psychiatric examination.

Mohammad, armed with a pistol, commandeered a Pakistan International Airlines Fokker 27 Friday on a domestic flight with 41 persons aboard and demanded money and a flight to India for cancer treatment.

College students take to the kayaks to beat rush-hour traffic around bay

BREMERTON, Wash. (AP)—Dave Young and Brian Johnson don't want to battle traffic to get to classes at Olympic Community College—so they paddle a kayak every day across the Puget Sound between Bainbridge Island and the mainland.

"It sure beats driving the highway," says Young, 23. "We save gas, time and money. Besides, we'd rather fight the elements than fight traffic."

Their drive would be 40 miles long, across the only bridge connecting the island to the Washington shore. The kayak trip takes 20 minutes, plus time to hitch a ride from a marina to campus, seven miles away.

"We can really zip along when we put out the effort," Young said. "We don't notice getting tired of rowing when there is a challenge."

THEY'VE run into rough weather, whitecaps and temperatures down to 20 degrees. Once they had to paddle twice the distance because a strong wind kept pushing them back. Another time they were almost lost in thick fog, but never have they been swamped.

"It's fun when it's rugged,"

Johnson insisted. "When it is mundane you tend to just think about getting to the destination and the water gets sticky."

Johnson, a 22-year-old humanities student, says he and Young often sing blues duets while they ply the waters.

"Sometimes sailboaters think we are crazy," he said. "But we sing about lacking money, lacking sleep, and forgetting to do our homework."

"Pretty soon," he added, "we will start fishing on the way home to catch our supper."

Profit-minded student finds investment in apartments

By TERESA GAHAGAN
Collegian Reporter

A strong background in business has paid off for a K-State student who recently purchased the University Terrace Apartments from the University.

Reza Vazirian, an American student from Iran, bought the apartments for $790,000 from the Endowment Association because he thought "it was a good buy and a good investment."

With the help of an architect, Vazirian, now a sophomore in art and a third year architecture student, said he plans "to improve those apartments." He said he wants to re-landscape the area, add a swimming pool and tennis courts and expand the playground.

Vazirian said he would like to keep running the apartments the same way K-State did. The apartments, he said, will continue to house K-State faculty, but if there are vacancies the apartments will be available to the public.

BEFORE coming to the United States five years ago, Vazirian studied business in Iran. He said when people now ask him about the apartments and realize he is a student, they try to take advantage of him.

"But," Vazirian said, "I wouldn't have taken on such a large project if I couldn't handle it."

Vazirian said he and his brother plan to run the 58 apartments, but hope to hire someone to help them in the future. The apartments, which are located about one mile west of campus on College Avenue, spread over more than five acres.

After he graduates, Vazirian said he plans to stay in Manhattan, "but not for all of my life," he said. When he leaves he said he may sell the apartments "depending on if I can find someone to buy them."

ACCORDING to Kenneth Heywood, executive vice president of the K-State Endowment Association, the Endowment

Association had been considering selling the apartments for several years.

Until July 1, 1977, the sale was not possible, because the state owned the land on which the apartment complex had been built, Heywood said. On this date, however, the state "swapped" this piece of land for another piece of land then owned by the Endowment Association.

Regents approve acquisition of land for forestry project

K-State received authorization Friday to acquire nearly 20 acres for research in Geary County at the January meeting of the Board of Regents.

The land will be used for forestry related research on hardwood trees, according to Floyd Smith, director of the agricultural research station.

Smith said they hoped to secure final authorization for the land from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare by mid-March.

Use of the land for experimental purposes will begin almost immediately, he said.

"We hope to start some plantings by the end of this spring and perhaps conduct some weed and brush control research this spring," he said.

The Board also approved renovation costs of $240,000 to renovate the Walnut Cottage at the Parsons State Hospital for a Southeastern Kansas Branch Experimental Station headquarters building.

'Cats dumped by fired-up Jayhawks

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

The K-State Wildcats fell short in their effort to knock Kansas University from its commanding position in the Big Eight Conference race in Lawrence Saturday night.

Too many of the Wildcats' shots fell short, or long, or just refused to go down as KU took the contest, 56-52. The loss leaves K-State 2-3 in the conference while KU is 5-0.

K-State was 23-of-59 from the field for a 39 percent average, which was better than KU's 22-of-62 for 36 percent performance. However, the 'Cats had a 49 percent average in conference play before Saturday, and their big guns, Mike Evans and Curtis Redding, were 5-of-14 and 5-of-20 respectively.

That doesn't mean the Wildcats didn't have their moments offensively.

ROLANDO BLACKMAN downed 7-of-10 shots in the game and scored 15 points. He scored 10 of K-State's first 20 points by working for 10-footers and by converting offensive rebounds into baskets.

But the 6-5 freshmen took only two shots in the second half, making both.

"I was trying to mostly control the game," Blackman said as his reason for not shooting more.

Evans fired the 'Cats to a 42-37 lead in the first five minutes of the second half after a 30-30 halftime score. He made five shots in a row, but he took only four more shots during the rest of the game.

Redding, suffering one of worst shooting nights of the year, bounced in and out of the lineup as Coach Jack Hartman searched for a squad that could make up for the lack of scoring.

K-STATE led 44-37 with 11 minutes to play, but did not score for the next three minutes as KU whittled the lead to 45-42.

The Jayhawks took the lead for good with 5:15 to play on a Donnie

Von Moore turnaround jump shot from the side of the free throw line.

In the closing minutes Redding nearly pulled the game out of the fire, as he did last year in K-State's win at Lawrence. He made a free throw to pull K-State to within 52-48. Then after a Steve Soldner steal, he downed a 19-footer with 1:34 remaining.

SECONDS LATER Redding took another 20-footer that bounced in and out.

"I looked it all the way in the rim," Redding said of the shot. With 30 seconds remaining Redding worked the middle of the lane for a right-handed drive shot with two defenders on him. The shot rimmed off.

"The shots just didn't go down," Redding said. "It wasn't the defense."

Two free throws by KU's Darnell Valentine with 21 seconds left iced the game for KU.

"I think I saw some fatigue out there," Hartman said of K-State's second half play. He pointed out that Soldner and Evans played the entire game and that he had only three forwards to use. Brent Murphy, who was slated to start, was sidelined with a bruised thigh.

"We got hesitant, not from a pressure situation, but we just didn't have good movement," Hartman said.

COMPENSATING for the poor shooting, Hartman said K-State "did a good job defensively" to control the tempo of the game.

"We've got to be doing a lot of things right to be in the ballgame," Hartman said of the way the Wildcats made up for their missed shots.

Blackman and Redding scored 15 points apiece, to lead K-State, and had six rebounds apiece. Soldner grabbed eight rebounds and Evans had six.

Kansas won the rebounding battle 46-34.

parity, which for wheat would be $5.02 a bushel. Farmers now receive about 60 percent parity for all farm products.

"We don't want support from the government. We want it from the marketplace," he said.

"The beautiful thing about parity is when costs of production go up, the price for products will also go up."

LUTHI said farmers also want the government to stop importing farm products and using farm exports as leverage for foreign policy demands.

According to statistics compiled by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the government imported nearly 600,000 head of cattle and nearly 30,000 head of hogs in the first eight months of 1977.

Blake tells of her cancer showdown

By BECCY TANNER
Features Editor

KANSAS CITY—In Hollywood they call it timing. It was timing, she said, if her eyes got misty and her voice cracked. It was then that America knew Matt Dillon was in trouble. And it was timing when her show, Gunsmoke, was canceled after two decades.

Again, it was timing a year and a half ago when Amanda Blake noticed a sore under her tongue.

Miss Kitty is dead now, except when her ghost returns for daily reruns on television. But the woman who portrayed the owner of the Long Branch Saloon is still alive, even though she had to survive a long fight with cancer.

Sunday, at an informal reception in Kansas City, Blake told supporters of Animal-Kind about her life.

In the fall of 1976, Blake noticed a sore under her tongue. It frightened her. For three months she avoided a doctor.

"The hardest thing I had to cope with was my procrastination," Blake said. "I was scared. I knew I had a problem, but I was afraid to go to the doctor, because I knew he would tell me it was cancerous," she said.

BLAKE finally had a doctor examine the lesion in January 1977.

He confirmed it was a malignant tumor. She was referred to the M.D. Anderson System Cancer Center Tumor Institute in Houston.

In an eight-hour operation, her throat was cut from ear to ear, the bottom half of her tongue and the floor of her mouth were removed. Thigh tissue was transplanted to her mouth.

Follow-up visits have shown Blake has no more cancer. But she has had to go through therapy to speak with a rebuilt tongue.

SHE SURVIVED because she wanted to be a successful person.

"I've always done pretty much what I've wanted to do. I've had to set standards and goals. I've always wanted to be a successful person. To do that I have had to have determination and tenacity."

Blake is now semi-retired as an actress but is an activist in the Humane Society. Her life, she said, now deals with protecting the animal kingdom.

"I am very animal oriented. I was raised with animals—Mother and Father were very animal oriented. I was taught to have respect for animals, of all kinds.

"My philosophy is such that we were put on this earth to live in accord with nature. We have to share this world with the animals. I am delighted to help them if I can."

farm strike and is selling products only to make some payments and is buying only essential items from the marketplace.

He has participated in several tractorcades and rallies, including the December rally in Topeka. He also works in the Manhattan strike office and attends many area strike meetings.

"That's the way you keep up with what's going on," he said. He did plant wheat last fall, but he said he will plow up some of that wheat as soon as farmers decide how much to plow up.

Plowing up crops is certainly not profitable, he said, but there is no investment in the land to lose money on either.

LUTHI said it costs him about $4,000 a year to maintain his 450 acres, not including the value of the land. With good weather conditions and a high yield, he could make an $800 profit in a crop year assuming he gets at least $3 a bushel for wheat.

But things just haven't been going that well. So his family has been cutting down on unnecessary expenses. They have been watching a lot more TV, he said.

"This has been going on two and a half years," he said. "We could see it coming so we've been cutting back gradually."

"We're living on half of what we did five years ago," Marilyn Luthi said. "It gets awfully tight and squeaky."

MRS. LUTHI also supports the farm strike and has worked in the Manhattan strike office.

"I definitely support it, because we can't keep on going with prices as they are," she said.

She has considered taking a job, but with her children and her contributions to the farm operations, working would not be practical.

"If it wasn't for Jerry's electric business, I would probably go back to work," she said. "In the home—that's where I want to be."

LUTHI thinks his wife is too necessary on the farm to go to work. She often helps in the field during harvest, provides transportation to and from the field, prepares meals for men in the field and is often traveling to get machinery parts and other items.

Mr. Luthi said his farm is about 80 percent self-sufficient and their garden and beef save at least $100 a month on the food bill.

To cut expenses further, the Luthis bought a wood-burning stove to lower the heating bills. Their larger two-story home is heated by propane in addition to the wood stove.

The house is poorly insulated and Luthi has considered buying insulation which could be used as a tax deduction. But he added if you have a small income to tax, it's difficult to make deductions.

But the Luthi family is hoping their income will increase if the farm strike is successful. How long that will take, they don't know.

"How long we can hold out, I don't know," he said. "Frankly, I don't think we'll get 100 percent parity. But we'll sure try or we'll be without anything."

Borg tops Connors for Grand Slam win

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Bjorn Borg defended his title in the $250,000 Grand Slam of Tennis by defeating Jimmy Connors 7-6, 3-6, 6-1 Sunday in a furiously paced match that started under friendly sunny skies and ended three hours later under lights and thunderclouds.

Borg, who defeated Connors here a year ago, earned $125,000 for two days of tennis in this four-man event. Connors collected $50,000.

Twelve of the 29 nationally televised games, played on clay before 8,000 spectators, went to deuce. There were 15 service breaks, eight of them by Borg.

Connors appeared to have the first set in hand, leading five games to four and holding two set points. But Borg forced two errors and evened the set at 5-5. The two players then held service, forcing a 12-point tiebreaker that Borg won easily, 7-1.

After trading service breaks in the first four games of the second set, Borg finally held service and led 3-2.

He had break point several times in the next game but finally was wide on a passing shot and long on a backhand to enable Connors to even the set at 3-3.

Connors won the next three straight, breaking the Swede's service twice, to take the middle set.

Borg started the final set quickly. He broke service twice and took a 3-0 advantage before Connors broke back.

Notre Dame drops Bruins

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Bruce Flowers grabbed a crucial rebound, then sank a free throw with one second remaining Sunday, helping seventh ranked Notre Dame turn back third-ranked UCLA's second half comeback and beat the Bruins 75-73 in a nationally televised college basketball game.

UCLA's James Wilkes missed the first shot of a one-and-one free throw opportunity that could have tied the game with four seconds to play before Flowers yanked the ball off the boards and was fouled in the scramble.

It was Notre Dame's second victory of the season over the Bruins, who saw their nine game winning string snapped and fell to 13-2. The Irish now are 11-3.

Russians impressed 'Cats

The Russians came to Manhattan last week and left impressions everywhere, from Aggieville to the basketball court. But K-State made a few impressions of its own.

After the Russians watched the Oklahoma State game they went away amused. Not because of the play, though they might have been amused by that, but because of the atmosphere in the fieldhouse.

"The game was incidental. Their attention was to the cheerleaders, pep band and the two wildcats," said Bill Wall, the executive director of the American Basketball Association of the United States of America (ABA-USA). Wall is the only American traveling with the Russians on their coast-to-coast tour.

ON THE day of the game the Russians went on a shopping spree of Aggieville. Their favorite items were Levi's. I saw Head Coach Alexandr Gomelesky pay for two pairs of jeans and a stocking cap from a wad of bills too big to fit in a billfold.

The 7-4 center, Vladimir Tkachenko, went into Ballard's and tried on a jacket he really wanted. He was frustrated to find the sleeves were about six inches too short. The saleslady said she was too scared to tell him it didn't quite fit.

After talking with Wall I learned quite a bit about the likes and dislikes of the Russians. "They like blue jeans, records, Converse and Adidas," Wall said.

THEY ALSO like television, he said. Though they can't understand it.

"They like the action line — cops and robbers stuff. They can also relate to 'Star Wars' and 'Close Encounters.'"

Besides enjoying television, appearing on it is even better. Gomelesky is extremely media conscious, Wall said.

He becomes very animated and the smiles come on when the cameras appear," Wall said. "They don't get this kind of attention at home where ice hockey and soccer are the number one sports."

For instance, I have never seen a face light up like Gomelesky's did when I asked him for an interview.

When it was finally time for the game I was getting a little worried no one was going to show up to watch. Finally the fieldhouse started to come alive and it was filled with a different atmosphere.

THE RUSSIANS trotted onto the court for warm-ups showing an unexpected openness by waving to the crowd. They weren't the stern, unfriendly foreigners we'd heard about.

They were fierce competitors though, and there was to be a small battle in Ahearn. It wouldn't prove anything politically, but it would show that K-State can compete with any of the top ranked teams in the nation.

Pre-game activities were a little different than usual. The Russian national anthem was played and I don't think anyone could have helped being a little emotional. Then the Star Bangled Banner was played. It seemed as if everyone stood a little taller and was more proud of our country with the presence of the Russians.

A gift exchange took place between both teams after the players were introduced. The Russians gave pennants while the 'Cats presented t-shirts (mostly extra-large!). Then it was time for tip-off.

AT THE START of the game, the crowd was favorable to both teams. Everyone was expecting to see the 'Cats get annihilated. When the fans realized the 'Cats had a definite chance to win, especially after a well-played first half, the cheering became more one-sided.

Before the game Gomelesky saw an interpreter who was with the team at Marymount last year. He went up to her and pleaded, "Will you cheer for us? You be only one."

American flags were waving throughout the game, as the 7,000 fans made more noise than any packed house has in a long time. At the final buzzer smiling faces were everywhere, except for the faces of 15 or so Russian visitors.

Young Wildcat thinclads impressive in second place finish at Oklahoma

Vince Parrette, Ed DeLashmutt, Doug Knauss and Kevin Sloan all claimed first place finishes to lead the K-State track squad to second place finish in the Sooners Indoor Relays in Oklahoma City, Friday.

The meet, the first of the season for the 'Cats, was won by Kansas University with 137 points with runner-up K-State racking up 122 points.

Parrette, a sophomore, placed first in the triple jump competition with a leap of 51 feet, seven inches, while teammate Keith Linck placed second in the event with a jump of 49 feet, one inch. Parrette also finished second in the 60 yard low hurdles with a time of 6.98, and claimed a third place finish in the 60 yard dash with a time of 6.3.

DELASHMUTT, a freshman, took first place in the mile with a time of 4:14.11 while teammates Doug Knauss, a junior, placed first and sophomore Ron Nofsinger second in the pole vault competition with vaults of 16 feet, one inch, and 15 feet, six inches, respectively.

Junior Kevin Sloan, who sat out last season with mononucleosis, set a Sooners Indoor Relays record while claiming first place in the long jump with a leap of 24 feet, six and one-half inches.

"We took a young team down there and competed well," Howe said.

Big 8 scores

Iowa State, led by Big Eight scoring leader Andrew Parker's 22 points, stayed in the thick of the Big Eight race by coming from behind to defeat Oklahoma State 59-53, in Stillwater, Saturday.

With the victory the Cyclones hold on to second place in the Big Eight with a 4-1 record, while the loss dropped the Cowboys to 0-5 in conference play.

The Oklahoma Sooners staved off a late rally by the Colorado Buffaloes to post a 73-66 victory over the Buffs in Boulder.

COLORADO'S Toney Ellis was the leading scorer in the game tallying 20 points for Colorado, who with the loss drop to 1-4 in conference play, while Oklahoma, led by freshman Raymond Whitley's 13 points, raised its record to 3-2 in Big Eight play.

The Nebraska Cornhuskers, after leading by 12 points with only eight minutes left to play, held off a furious Missouri comeback in the waning minutes to defeat the Tigers 56-55 in Lincoln.

Clay Johnson and Stan Ray led the scoring for the Tigers with 19 points a piece. The loss, dropped Missouri to 2-3 in conference play, while Nebraska, led by Carl McPipe's 14 points moves its record to 2-3.

Solar energy could help proposed air terminal

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

Manhattan may have the first solar heated and cooled airport terminal in the country if the city commissioners can agree that scarce city funds are worthy of the project.

Commissioner Terry Glasscock presented a resolution at the Jan. 17 commission meeting authorizing acting City Manager Les Rieger to apply for funds for the planning phase of the terminal.

Glasscock said that he, Jim Rothschild, economic development director of Manhattan's chamber of commerce, and Frederick Rohles, former chairman of the chamber's aviation committee, attended a meeting with Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) officials in November to discuss the funding of a new airport terminal.

FAA officials said chances of funding a new terminal were remote.

THE OFFICIALS did suggest they contact the Ozark Regional Commission (ORC) of the U.S. Department of Commerce as a funding outlet for the planning phase of the project, Glasscock said.

ORC representatives said money was short but some communities don't use all their allocated funds. These funds may be available at the end of the year.

It was then the idea of solar power came up.

Rohles, K-State's environmental research director, said Manhattan could use solar power in a new terminal.

"Why not the airport," Rohles said. "It (the terminal) needs to be improved."

The solar-powered aspect of the terminal could attract different funding sources because of the uniqueness of the project, Glasscock said.

HE SAID the Energy Commission could be a source for funding the construction of the terminal.

The project would be funded by matching federal grants. The federal agency funding the program would provide 80 percent of the money with the other 20 percent coming from local coffers.

The initial cost of the solar system would be high but once the solar collectors were in place they would cost little to maintain, Rohles said.

Glasscock said he placed the planning phase high on his priority list because the city should take advantage of the chance for funding such a project.

He believes the city can come up with the money.

"I feel that we (the city) have enough money to share in our portion of the project," he said.

"But we need money for other more immediate problems that need to be rectified before the building phase can be considered," he said.

SOME CITY commissioners, however, don't think there's enough money to match the federal grants.

"Now our commitment is to the breaking on airport improvements," Commissioner Robert Smith said.

The city commissioners passed the resolution but Commissioner Henry Otto stipulated that no money be committed to the project yet.

The solar power aspect of the terminal "is interesting and that's why I went with it," Otto said. "To look at it won't cost anything."

Commissioner Robert Linder agreed with Otto saying he was interested in the project because of the solar heating part of the terminal.

THE airport terminal would be "lower on my priority list if not for the feature of solar power," he said. "It's a forward-looking proposal."

Otto said he supported the project of upgrading the runway and safety facilities now in progress but he and other commissioners are not convinced of the general need for a new terminal.

"Sit in the terminal we have now and see how many seats are filled," he said.

Otto said downtown redevelopment, sewer and water projects, street maintenance and recreation facilities are problems he would fund before the terminal.

"There's only so much blood in the city turnip and I'm not willing to take money from recreation funds" for a new terminal, Linder said.

Students who fail to graduate may find they miscalculated their hours

By PERYN COMINSKY
Collegian Reporter

One fourth of the students who applied for December graduation in the school of arts and sciences failed to graduate, according to Majorie Cleland, assistant to the dean of arts and sciences.

Cleland said the major reason for not clearing a student for graduation is that they lack a sufficient number of credit hours.

Some of the confusion comes from students forgetting that they have at one time failed a course, or that they have failed to turn an incomplete into a grade, Cleland said.

ACCORDING to Cleland, most of the confusion students have about their total number of credit hours results from the University's retake policy.

The retake policy, which was instituted in the spring semester of 1975, allows students to take a course an unlimited number of times in an attempt to get a better grade.

For example, Cleland said, if a student retakes a three credit hour course, the University's computer will tally a total of six hours for that class once for the first time it was taken and once for the retake.

Until the student's transcript is hand-checked in the dean's office, the correct total of credit hours may not show up, Cleland said.

E.M. GERRITZ, dean of Admissions and Records, said that after 90 hours of credit have been attempted by a student, the Office of Admissions and Records sends the student's transcripts to that student's dean's office for a grade check. It is during this grade check that lower grades and extra credit hours are removed from the student's records, he said.

"Still another point of confusion that stems from the retake policy is that some students are under the impression that if they retake a course and receive a lower grade, the better of the two grades will stand," Cleland said.

Cleland said that the grade of the last retake is the one that is recorded for credit. For example, she said, if a student takes a course and receives a B and then retakes it and receives a D — the D is the grade that is recorded.

"At least some of the responsibility for an assured graduation must be borne by the student," Cleland said. The dean's office can only go so far in making grade checks," she said. Beyond that, the student must keep track of failed courses or incompletes which must be finished for a grade, she said.

Film director dies in crash of helicopter in Philippines

MANILLA, Philippines (AP)—An American film director and three other persons scouting locations for a movie were killed when their helicopter hit a power line and plunged into jungle near Manila, authorities reported Sunday.

They identified the American as William Girdler Jr., who directed the Hollywood thriller "Grizzly."

Also killed in the crash Saturday were British producer Patrick Allan Kelly, Filipino film executive Dennis Jovan, and the helicopter's pilot, Jess Gara, officials said.

U.S.-Soviet chemical trade to show resource depletion ODESSA, U.S.S.R. (AP)—The only major energy-related project in the Soviet Union involving U.S. companies is well under way at a sprawling, three-square-mile site along the Black Sea coast near this warm-water port.

The $360 million Occidental Petroleum Corporation project does not deal directly with fuels such as oil or natural gas. Instead, it involves ammonia and other chemicals vital to the manufacture of fertilizers.

The first shipload of Soviet ammonia covered by the massive East-West barter arrangement arrived Saturday at Tampa, Fla. The ammonia was not produced at the still-unfinished Occidental complex but elsewhere in the Soviet Union.

IN RETURN, the Russians will be receiving superphosphoric acid made from phosphate rock mined by Occidental in Florida.

The deal, initially announced in 1972, ranks as the largest U.S.-Soviet commercial accord ever negotiated.

Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer, an advocate of expanded trade ties with the Soviet Union, estimates the overall value of chemicals to be exchanged at $20 billion. The deal is projected to run for 20 years.

Occidental officials note that the production of ammonia is an energy-intensive process requiring large supplies of natural gas. Thus, they argue, the shipping of relatively low-cost Soviet ammonia to the United States will help reduce the industrial drain on dwindling U.S. reserves of natural gas.

"We're really importing energy, in a way," said Vincent Leggio, Occidental's resident manager here.

THE PROJECT is being handled by Occidental Engineering Co., a subsidiary of the Los Angeles-based petroleum corporation.

Occidental is also involved in building a smaller ammonia and superphosphoric acid facility at Ventspils, Latvia, and in the laying of a 1,500-mile pipeline to stretch from the Odessa terminal to ammonia-producing plants on the Volga River near Kuibyshev.

Other Western firms taking part in work at the Odessa complex include Creusot-Loire of France, building an ammonia plant, and Pohligh Heckel Bleichet of West Germany, handling a plant for urea, an ammonia-derived nitrogen compound also used in fertilizers.

The French firm Societe Entrepore holds the major share in Soviet contracts for the main 14-inch-diameter ammonia pipeline, and Chemico, a subsidiary of the U.S. General Tire and Rubber Corp., has a $200 million contract for four ammonia plants in the Kuibyshev area.

Nuclear power a favorite alternative

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a two-part series about K-State and nuclear energy research.

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

K-State's Department of Nuclear Engineering is trying to find answers to the world's energy problems but not all of their work involves energy.

"We get into a lot of weird areas," according to Dean Eckhoff, head of the department. The department has worked with solar power, coal and wheat straw as alternative sources of energy.

"Nuclear power will take its fair share in the coming years," Eckhoff said.

About 10 to 12 percent of the country's energy is generated by nuclear reactors now and that figure could rise 35 to 40 percent by the turn of the century, he said.

The energy crisis is political and economic, not technological," Steve Coulson, graduate in nuclear engineering, said. "The technology is available today for both coal and nuclear plants. I don't have the slightest reservations about coal or nuclear plants."

"Coal seems familiar and safe," Coulson said. "There seems to be more unanswered questions about nuclear power."

ECKHOFF said that coal isn't entirely safe, however. Coal's by-products are not completely understood, he said. Coal doesn't burn clean and it produces massive amounts of waste products.

"The critics that say that we should stop nuclear (energy production) at any cost and concentrate on solar and coal energy are reminiscent of the early days of nuclear energy," Eckhoff said. "Everyone thought that it was free and would last forever."

Eckhoff and Coulson pointed out that no energy source is free. The country shouldn't rely on solar and geothermal energy, because many years and a lot of money are needed to develop them, Coulson said.

The first nuclear reactor was built in 1942. Today, nuclear power only accounts for 12 percent of our electricity, Coulson said.

The department is not only developing nuclear energy, but conducts tests with coal. It recently acquired a plug-flow drop furnace, which researchers use to perform experiments on coal attempting to purify it and cut down on sulfur exhaust.

K-State's departments of chemical engineering, agricultural engineering and the University of Kansas' Department of Chemical Engineering combined forces recently with the nuclear engineering department to research the use of wheat straw as a possible fuel.

If the project is successful, wheat straw will be combined with other fuels such as coal to power a generating plant.

THE nuclear department also works on solving energy problems by informing the public.

"Our most important function to the citizens of Kansas is to tell them as much as possible about energy," Eckhoff said. "Last year we gave 750 presentations around the state to 27,000 people, mostly high school students and secondary teachers."

"Most people don't have any idea what's going on with the energy situation," Coulson said. "Our current life-style is so supported by energy that a decline of energy sources would result in a severe decline in the standard of living and gross national product."

Carter sends Congress $500 billion 1979 budget

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter sent Congress a 1979 budget Monday calling for $25 billion in tax cuts, higher spending on defense, energy and education, but no big outlays for wholly new programs.

Even so, the magnitude of the proposed spending, $500.2 billion, brought critical comment from some key members of Congress.

"I would like to see us under $500 billion," House Speaker Thomas O'Neill told reporters.

Rep. George Mahon (D-Tex.), chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, recalled that a $6 billion budget was considered unbelievably high in 1935, the year he entered Congress.

MAHON applauded Carter's announced intention of working with the private sector of the economy to reduce unemployment. But he said accompanying proposals for spending and large tax cuts to stimulate the economy involve considerable risks and "the greatest risk appears to be inflation."

The budget estimates $439.6 billion in receipts against the outlays. This would leave the government operating in the red by $60.6 billion, only a little less than the estimated $61.8 billion deficit for the present year.

Chairman Robert Giaino (D-Conn.) of the House Budget Committee, said the contemplated deficit is "much too high in times of solid economic growth."

Praising Carter for calling for restraints on spending, Giaino added, "It is now up to the Congress to commit itself to similar restraints, otherwise the deficit will continue at levels that will be impossible to defend before the American public."

CARTER reiterated his commitment to a balanced budget but acknowledged that the target date of 1981, which he set during his presidential campaign, might be missed if the economy needed more tax-cut tonic during the intervening years.

Overall, his budget set spending $38 billion higher than the present year's estimated total, and receipts $39.2 billion higher.

Chairman Al Ullman (D-Ore.) of the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee, who had already called the administration tax reduction proposals excessive, questioned also the extent to which proposed tax tightening, projected to recoup some of the lost revenues, would be approved.

'Sabotage' charges stall peace talks

JERUSALEM (AP)—Israel on Monday countered Egypt's charge that Israelis sabotaged Jerusalem peace talks with a claim that Cairo reneged on a Sinai demilitarization pledge. Prime Minister Menahem Begin said stalled negotiations can resume when Cairo softens what he called its strident anti-Semitic tone.

A U.S. envoy, meanwhile, held "exploratory" talks with Israeli leaders aimed at getting talks back under way.

In Cairo, the semi-official newspaper Alakhbar said Egypt was launching an extensive diplomatic campaign, sending envoys to Europe and Africa in an effort to generate public opinion against Israel.

BEGIN, defending his policy in a 70-minute speech to the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, accused Egypt of creating an atmosphere in which negotiation was impossible.

"All this contempt between nations came all of a sudden as negotiations were at their peak and Israel was showing good will," Begin said, thumbing through a thick file of extracts from Egyptian newspapers.

He said Egyptian President Anwar Sadat reneged on a pledge he made during his historic visit to Jerusalem last November that Egyptian troops would not cross the natural mountain spine, running along the western edge of the Sinai Peninsula. Begin said Israel based its offer of complete withdrawal from the desert wilderness on Sadat's pledge that his army would remain 120 miles from the Israeli border.

Sadat called his foreign minister home from Jerusalem talks last Wednesday, stalling negotiations on principles for peace that opened the previous day.

THE Egyptian leader told his Parliament Saturday that Israel sabotaged the Jerusalem conference. He said Begin deceived him by agreeing in preliminary talks at Ismailia, Egypt, on Christmas Day that Jewish settlements in Sinai were a side issue and then making them a central topic when full-fledged talks began.

At the urging of President Carter, Sadat said parallel military talks, scheduled to resume Sunday, in Cairo could continue as planned. But Israel said it would not send its defense minister back to Cairo until Egypt halted its "campaign of vilification."

Despite the hard tone of Begin's message, political observers described the speech as moderate.

Begin said Israel "left the door wide open" for resumption of talks. "If we see in the next few days that there are no more insults there will be no obstacle to our defense minister's return to Cairo."

Israeli Maj. Gen. Avraham Tamir is still in Cairo reviewing Israeli and Egyptian position papers on Sinai. He stayed behind when military talks recessed 11 days ago.

BEGIN insisted the Jerusalem talks were making progress when Sadat recalled his foreign minister.

The Israeli leader also disclosed contents of an agreement on principles for a Mideast peace that he worked out with Sadat at their Ismailia summit. The points or agreement were not published because of disputes over the Palestinian issue, he said.

According to Begin, he and Sadat resolved to work for peace treaties based on Israeli withdrawal from Arab territories captured in 1967, "termination of all claims or states of belligerency," freedom of navigation in international waterways, "a just settlement of the refugee problem," and the establishment of demilitarized zones on Israel's frontiers.

Begin dealt at length with what he called Egyptian "insults" and said he was obliged to "defend the dignity of the Jewish people and the state of Israel."

Noting that the Egyptian media is government controlled, Begin blamed Sadat for the anti-Israeli campaign in the press.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton met privately Monday with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Defense Minister Ezer Weizman for what Atherton called an "exploratory exchange of views."

'Common sense' major objective for latest U.S. Senate contender

By PAUL RHODES
Staff Writer

Bringing Kansas common sense back to Washington is a key objective of Deryl Schuster, Republican candidate for the United States Senate seat now occupied by Senator James Pearson.

Schuster, 42, officially declared his candidacy in Manhattan Monday as part of his state-wide announcement tour which will cover 49 communities. Schuster, who has never held an elective office, said he decided to pursue his political convictions after Pearson announced his retirement.

According to Schuster, big government has had too much confidence placed in it. Many major problems the U.S. now faces are a testimonial to the shortcomings of big government, he said.

"Only as a last resort should the government substitute itself for individual efforts," he said.

SCHUSTER said he sympathizes with problems faced by Kansas farmers and believes the federal government must provide support for serious farm problems.

"I would like to see the government aggressively seek foreign markets for our agricultural products," Schuster said.

When asked about the Panama Canal treaty, Schuster said he doesn't see how he could vote to ratify it in its present form.

"Both Panama and the United States have prospered from our present agreement," he said. "I don't see anything to gain in giving it (the canal) away."

The recent minimum wage increase also concerns Schuster, who believes increasing the minimum wage is the wrong way to fight inflation. Schuster said he would rather see the government fight inflation directly instead of increasing minimum wage to match inflationary jumps.

"The long-range ramifications are going to be very bad," he said. "It's eventually going to reach the point where some employers can't afford to pay minimum wages."

SCHUSTER plans to make two return trips to Manhattan during his campaign, one to be aimed at the K-State campus.

Schuster said he respects the opinions of students and wants to incorporate them in his campaign.

Schuster, a native Kansan, was executive vice president of the Overland Park State Bank and Trust Company before announcing his candidacy. He has also worked eight years for the Small Business Administration as a district and regional director.

Increased security guards reactor

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second in a two-part series about K-State and nuclear energy research.

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

Security has been increased around K-State's TRIGA Mark II nuclear reactor recently due to federal regulations aimed at reducing the chance of nuclear materials being stolen or sabotaged.

The new regulations for the reactor are part of a nation-wide regulation of all nuclear power plants and reactors by the Nuclear Regulatory Agency (NRC), according to Dean Eckhoff, head of the department of nuclear engineering.

"In recent years, there has been a gradual change in regulations around all types of power plants," said Richard Faw, director of the reactor laboratory.

BOTH Michael McEwan, reactor supervisor, and Faw said they were forbidden by law to talk about the kind of security system at the K-State reactor.

"The new regulations principally have to do with international safeguards," Faw said. The security has always been tight around nuclear reactors, he added, but in recent years the government has become more concerned with keeping terrorists and small countries from obtaining nuclear material.

The NRC inspects the nuclear engineering department every year. It offers suggestions, enforces regulations and gives the department a rating on how well it's doing. K-State's department has never received less than a "good" rating, Eckhoff said.

THE DEPARTMENT tried to avoid the NRC rules, which it felt were unnecessary.

"We fought it the best we could," McEwan said. "The government requested comments from us and we wrote letters saying that we didn't want the new regulations."

He explained that after all of the letters, the government decided the benefits of the regulations outweigh the cost to the University.

"I don't see it that way," McEwan said. The security plan is very expensive, into "thousands of dollars," according to McEwan, and the government doesn't pay for any of it.

"It's like car insurance," he said. "They say you have to have it, but they don't pay for any of it. It's a hassle for us to have to conform to more and more regulations, especially when we have to foot the bill."

THERE IS no danger of anyone getting into the department's reactor for terrorist purposes, according to Faw. The amount of uranium fuel is small, and there is no way to build a bomb out of the material on hand at the department.

The NRC regulations are the same at K-State as they are in nuclear power plants around the country, and there isn't any real danger of sabotage, according to both Faw and Eckhoff.

There is also no danger of explosion, Eckhoff said, but someone could hurt himself and a few others if he could get inside a reactor and pull a fuel rod.

"Anytime you're around radiation, you have to be careful," Eckhoff said. "But there's no real danger; in fact it's far less dangerous than driving my car to work in the morning."

Gunmen heist Belgian baron

PARIS (AP)—Masked gunmen ambushed an automobile carrying Baron Edouard-Jean Empain in central Paris Monday and abducted the Belgian nobleman, who is one of Europe's richest industrialists and heads a giant conglomerate with interests in the United States.

Hours after the late-morning abduction, the 40-year-old baron's family still had not received a ransom demand, authorities said. There was no firm clue to whether he was kidnapped for money or for political motives.

Police were mobilized nationwide and at France's borders in the hunt for Empain, father of three and scion of a long-powerful industrial family.

Police said Empain's chauffeur was in severe shock after being badly beaten by the four or five kidnapers in the well-organized operation. The gunmen used two trucks and a motorbike to close in on the industrialist's car just outside his apartment building near the Arc de Triomphe.

Empain, whose mother was American music hall star Rozell Rowland, is president and managing director of the French-Belgian Empain-Schneider industrial group of 150 companies.

The conglomerate, which has an annual turnover of $4.5 billion, is France's only nuclear power plant manufacturer, building U.S. Westinghouse plants under license, and it has large steel, shipping, banking and machinery production interests.

Wilmington 10 up for parole

RALEIGH, N.C.—Gov. James Hunt on Monday reduced the sentences of nine imprisoned members of the Wilmington 10, making all but one of them eligible for parole this year, but denied petitions seeking a full pardon for members of the group.

The sentence of the Rev. Ben Chavis, leader of the group, was reduced to permit parole eligibility on Jan. 1, 1980—two years earlier than before the governor's action.

The sentence of Ann Sheppard Turner, the only woman and the only white among the defendants, was unchanged. Turner already is free on parole.

Chavis and eight other black men were convicted of firebombing Mike's Grocery, a white-owned store in a black neighborhood of Wilmington, N.C., during racial violence in that port city in February 1971. They also were convicted of conspiracy and other charges and received prison sentences of more than 20 years each.

Eat better, live longer

WASHINGTON—A Senate panel that incited an argument with the American Medical Association and major food industry groups is sticking to its advice that consumers can lessen their chances of getting killer diseases by changing their diets.

The Committee on Nutrition on Monday released the second edition of its staff study, "Dietary Goals for the United States," after making only minor changes from the earlier report issued a year ago.

The new version again recommends that Americans decrease consumption of processed sugars, eggs and salt. It suggests substituting skim milk for whole milk and increasing consumption of fruits, vegetables and whole grains.

The most important change came in a recommendation to decrease consumption of meat, a proposal that brought heavy criticism from cattle producers. The new edition changed this to "decrease consumption of animal fat."

Franconia College closes

CONCORD, N.H.—After years of fighting financial problems, bad publicity and conservatives, Franconia College, an avant-garde school born in the tumultuous 1960s, closed Monday with hardly any warning.

"We heard rumors Saturday and didn't get official notice until Sunday," said Pat Grady, 22, an arts major from Sayville, N.Y.

"Today I'm trying to deal with it ... I'm hurting," she said.

She had expected the spring semester to begin on schedule Wednesday.

Church accepts gays

NEW YORK—The United Presbyterian Church was thrown into the forefront of the battle over ordination of acknowledged homosexuals on Monday after a committee report recommended that they be accepted.

But there were indications that a majority of the denomination's 2.6 million members strongly oppose such a position, making its adoption highly questionable.

The issue has flared widely in various denominations recently, along with the open drive by homosexuals against discrimination in society in general as well as in church life.

However, a recent national sampling of opinion in the church found that a heavy majority—71 percent of members and 68 percent of pastors—would regard it as improper to ordain a homosexual.

Farrell needs more financial support

Farrell Library is in financial trouble, according to K-State Dean of Libraries Jay Rausch.

But the K-State Administration doesn't seem to be helping the library as much as it could.

Rausch said library hours were cut back "four or five hours per week" going into fall '77 semester because of financial difficulties.

However, University reserve funds which could be used to help alleviate the financial problems of Farrell Library are being used to help fund the remodeling project of President Acker's office areas in Anderson Hall. The cost of this project is estimated by administrative officials to be about $50,000.

The budget for materials has been set at $20,000 by President Acker and labor cost (which will not be fully known until after spring break) is estimated to be in the area of $20,000 to $30,000.

THE KANSAS Board of Regents allocated $15,000 from the board's "special maintenance fund" in November 1977 to K-State to use for the remodeling project.

An additional $5,000 was drawn from the University's reserve fund to supplement the cost of remodeling.

The project will be supplemented further with funds available in the University's reserve funds for the '77-'78 fiscal year, according to assistant to the vice president for facilities, Vincent Cool.

"There is a flexibility in the use of these funds," Cool said.

In his regular press conference Monday morning, President Acker said that "flexibility exists" in the handling of unattached reserve funds and that "you have to make judgments" when deciding where the funds should go.

ACKER SAID Farrell Library's problems would not require the Board of Regents to budget more money for the library; but that the problems would be handled "internally."

"There are internal decisions to make. I would like to have less dependence (by Farrell) on unattached funds at the end of the year," Acker said.

"It's not really comfortable to not quite know whether you have the money to operate," Rausch said.

Rausch should not have to be groping for funds.

The educational quality of Farrell Library should not be allowed to suffer for the sake of beautifying Anderson Hall.

Letters to the editor

Reader urges rumor clarification about Anderson Hall renovation

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Collegian received this letter last Wednesday and has been researching the rumors from all angles. Our findings are in today's editorial.

Editor,

You can settle an argument and quite possibly put an end to a series of rumors recently making the rounds on campus. A colleague claims that the cost of renovating the offices in Anderson Hall for President Acker was originally set by the regents at $15,000, but the estimate is now somewhere in the neighborhood of a quarter of a million to one-half million dollars and closer to the latter than the former.

I contend that it is virtually impossible to spend that kind of money to rejuvenate a bunch of offices unless you pave the corridors with gold.

After all, the Bullock mansion here in Manhattan that was recently in the news cost in the region of $250,000, and that included the imported Italian marble for the fireplace. I am quite sure that the rumor about the President's office is just that, since the first time I heard it the cost was said to be $125,000, and it has increased at least threefold in two weeks.

To add insult to injury, it is said that President Acker has dipped into funds which could otherwise go for books for the library to pay for the added cost. You could do the campus community a service by putting an end to these falsehoods, providing us with the facts of the case, and getting the rumor-mongers off the poor man's back.

You remember Ford, don't you?

Dear Mom and Dad,

The semester is beginning as the usual bureaucratic nightmare. Classes have started and with the expected problems of registration, drop-add and class schedules. But I'm in and running.

This week has been generally rotten. The snow is spilling in the windows and my boots have holes in them. My heating bill was $187 and my books came to the heart-breaking total of $105.

NATURALLY, I'm broke. If there's anything you could contribute to my survival, I'd appreciate it.

I know I would usually end my letter with that thought, but something big has this campus hopping. Gerald Ford will be on campus next month. It's supposed to be a big secret and all, but things are slipping out.

Dad, you remember Ford, don't you? He used to be president. I learned all about him in my history class. Why, he's the only president to hold office without being elected! Rumor has it that he would prefer to be elected and is trying it again. Some people have all the breaks.

Ford was also the guy who let Nixon off the hook. They say that was the real catch to his not beating Carter. If I get a chance, I'd like to know what he got paid for that little action.

I GUESS there will be Secret Service men crawling out of the cracks around campus by the time Ford gets here. Some people say they fear another assassination attempt. But the way Ford is handling the visit, no one will get close enough to hear his voice, let alone try to knock him off.

He's going to give one lecture in my Survey of Mass Media class. Although it hasn't been announced officially, his visit to the class is supposed to improve its poor evaluations.

You remember me talking about that class. It's this deadbeat freshman-level course everyone takes for an easy communication requirement. Ford supposedly will talk about the press and the president. But most of the people in the course could care less about the press and the president. But then again, they had no say in the matter.

I'm starting to prepare some questions to ask him during his lecture if time allows. I was planning to go to class that day, if you can believe it. Is there anything you want to know?

I PLAN to ask him what it's like

Love,
Nancy

Dorm parking permit fraud presents no great problem

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

Residence hall parking permit fraud is a minor problem according to Haymaker Hall Parking Chairman Wyatt Hoch.

Hoch, junior in pre-design professions, said the fraudulent cases are "nothing to scream too much about."

Hoch said he meets with parking chairmen from other dormitories in the Derby Complex and the complex parking director to decide how many spaces will be allocated to each hall.

Students in each hall submit parking applications to their parking chairman, Hoch said.

Permits are issued with the help of a point systems and students receive points for their classification, the number of semesters they have lived in the residence hall and their number of credit hours, he said.

EXCLUDING freshmen, who are not allowed to purchase residence hall permits, Haymaker Hall had 350 applications filed last fall for 244 available spaces. The 106 residents with the least points didn't obtain permits, Hoch said.

The parking committee members issue the permits to avoid accusations of individual favoritism and to consider special cases like disabled residents, he said.

Sometimes freshmen and sophomores try to beat the system by having an upper-class resident who doesn't have a car and who has more points, apply for a parking permit for them, Hoch said.

When and if students are caught with a fraudulent permit, the permit is destroyed and both residents involved lose parking privileges for the year.

Last semester there were three cases in which residents were caught with fraudulent permits. The permits were revoked in all three instances, Hoch said.

No record of the fraud cases are kept from year to year, so getting caught with a fraudulent permit has no lasting effect on residents. However, Hoch said he would like to see records of the frauds kept each year.

"It would improve integrity," he said.

Insanity claimed in not guilty plea

A plea of not guilty by reason of insanity was entered by Earl Roberts at arraignment proceedings Monday at the Riley County District Court.

Roberts, a soldier stationed at Ft. Riley, is charged with first-degree murder in the Aug. 8 shotgun killing of James Sauers at Redbud Estates trailer park in Manhattan.

District Judge Ronald Innes will set a trial date when the new judicial term begins on Feb. 6.

SOME STUDENTS who qualify for permits lie about their total number of credit hours so they can get a permit for the parking lot adjacent to Haymaker rather than having to park in the lot across the street, Hoch said.

The students with the most points get permits for the adjacent lot. Hoch said he thinks this could cause problems.

Security and Traffic Director Paul Nelson said his department has no jurisdiction in fraud cases with residence hall permits because those permits are issued by the Housing Department.

Dormitory residents must register their cars with Security and Traffic the same as off-campus students, but dorm residents are not eligible to receive campus parking permits, Nelson said.

Security and Traffic officers ticket cars parked in residence hall parking lots which don't have hall permits, Nelson said.

The Housing Department issues residence hall parking permits, but each hall assigns its spaces, Hoch said. The selected students are given a card to present to the Housing Department when they go to buy a permit.

Housing Department personnel assume everyone that presents a card to them is authorized to have a permit.

The only way to prevent the permit fraud would be to double-check each application, Hoch said.

"We have no way of checking on all applications," he said. "It would be physically impossible."

Haymaker Hall Director Jim Putnam said he agrees that it would be impossible to double-check each application.

PUTNAM SAID if an application sounds suspicious, he and the parking chairman check it out. He said he also depends on students to anonymously inform him of fraud cases by using a complaint box in the dormitory lobby.

"I tell the students they're ripping each other off," Putnam said. "It's no sweat off my back."

One resident, who wished to remain anonymous, said he doesn't think anyone really cares about parking permit fraud.

"I know of five or ten people doing it," he said. "I'm sure there's a lot more."

Putnam and Hoch said they believe the best solution to the problem would be to have computerized applications for parking permits. A computer could cross-check the information for verification, Putnam said.

"It would save a lot of man hours. There may be legal trouble gaining information about credit hours though," Hoch said.

Putnam and Hoch said they had no idea what computerization of the parking permit applications would cost.

Incest: The scar never fades

Sharon doesn't have any baby pictures. But, she says, her childhood wasn't pretty.

She is the oldest of 14 brothers and sisters, eight of whom were sent to foster homes and cared for by the state of Kansas.

Sharon is 23 years old and the victim of incest: sexual intercourse conducted by members of the same family, usually father-daughter, brother-sister type relationships.

The National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect estimates that 100,000 to 200,000 youngsters in the United States are sexually molested regularly by a parent. One national study estimated one-third of all children may have encountered some form of sexual abuse from an adult.

From July 1974 to June of 1975, 1,505 cases of child abuse were reported in the state of Kansas. Of that number, 153, cases were sexual. The number is not large.

But some public officials who deal with victims of sexual abuse say it is important to remember those are the cases which have been reported. A far greater number of cases go unreported.

EVERY STATE has a law which requires certain persons or groups to report suspected cases of child abuse.

According to one social worker, in many states laws against incest

Sharon received more than sex-related abuse as she grew up in south-central and western Kansas. But it was the sexual abuse, she cites, as giving her "the most hang-ups."

Since the time of her sexual abuse, she has become a real-estate agent, received several years of counseling, married, is now divorced and has a small five-year-old daughter.

Special Effects

"To me, sexual abuse is the worst kind of abuse a child, or anyone for that matter, can receive. I had to get help because I didn't want hang-ups being passed on to another generation," she said.

ACCORDING to Sharon, one of the "hang-ups" she had was learning to cope with guilt. She said she had to talk about her experiences, but "I had no one to turn to."

"I couldn't live with everything. There was no one to listen. It was like I had everything bottled up inside and no way to release it."

"There was only one one room in the house. Everything went on in that room...I remember my mother sleeping with my uncle and then my little brother and I would try to copy what they were doing."

WHEN SHE was five, her mother took Sharon and her little brother to a church revival meeting in a near-by town. A lady sitting next to them commented on the two children.

"That was the last time I ever saw my natural parents—mother just gave us away to that lady. And somehow, the lady got custody of us."

Like some victims of child abuse, Sharon's problems and unhappy childhood memories do not end with her natural parents. Her life involved countless foster homes. She developed a misunderstanding and fear of adults.

"When I was seven, I remember one day playing with myself and the foster mother came in and saw me. She made me take all of my clothes off, then she tied me spread-eagled to a chair and table. She just left me there and went out shopping."

"Her husband came home and saw me. He raped me. The fucking bastard raped me. That took one hell of a time to get over."

SHARON WAS NOT the only person interviewed about incest. According to some, incest is the type of act which affects not only the victims, but society as a whole.

The mother of one foster home verified extensive amounts of incest and its effect on future generations.

"These kids are telling me of a tremendous amount of incest—Not just in this area but all over. And the effects are horrifying."

"The kids lose all sense of responsibility, self esteem and concepts. I think the key word is responsibility. Their authority figure is no good. The person they respected and loved is looked at differently."

According to this foster mother "things are going to get worse."

"The kids have no one they can relate to. A couple of years ago we only had to worry about kids with emotional problems; now its strictly behavior problems. I think incest has a lot to do with these problems," she said.

Robert Sinnett, psychologist at Lafene Student Health Center says incest can be a terrifying experience for the victim.

"When incest takes place it is terrifying for the child. They know something is 'wrong'. For them, it is a real bombshell of information that makes a lot of waves."

"It is the kind of information that one can not handle by himself. It

"When you deal with incestual relationships you commonly deal with sexual relationships involving members of the opposite sex. The surprise comes when the society thinks it is wrong to have those kind of relationships."

Ottenheimer said a lot of people in the United States tend to cite biological consequences when incest is practiced.

BUT THERE is no scientific

'These kids are telling me of a tremendous amount of incest — not just in this area but all over. And the effects are horrifying.'

—Foster home mother leads to some sexual difficulty and a repulsion of the whole experience," Sinnett said.

ACCORDING To Diane Nusbaum, social worker for the Kansas state social rehabilitation services in Great Bend, incest is found in all social classes, races and segments of society.

"Abusers cross all boundaries of economic station, of race, ethnic heritage, and religious faith. It is a myth that incest is the domain of the poor, but because the well-to-do are usually more capable of keeping it a secret, people tend to believe that abuse only occurs in low-income families," she said.

Martin Ottenheimer, associate professor of anthropology said although incest involves a variety of emotions, it is found in all societies around the world.

"As an anthropologist I must look at these taboos and discover what significance they have on individual societies."

"It's important to note that incest relations have been going on in the United States a long time, what is increasing is the number of reports," he said.

According to Ottenheimer it is easier to answer the question, 'why there is incest', rather than answering why its considered a taboo in all societies.

evidence that in-breeding relationships produce a disadvantageous population, Ottenheimer continued.

"There are different theories as to why people think incest is wrong. As an anthropologist, I have had to discover those reasons."

"Anthropologists tend to believe any time there are people of the opposite sex in close contact during a period of socialization the tendency for sex goes down. The family is the best definition of a close unit. This explains one theory of incestual taboos."

Some said there are different reasons as to "why" there is incest. A few tended to blame a permissive society saying pornographic magazines promoting incest tended to cause an increase in sexual abuse. But professionals tend to disagree.

"I find it difficult to find a scapegoat in the media," Sinnett said. "I would cite family relations and the fear to talk about the subject as one of the biggest problems."

But the one foster mother said simply, "Abuse, of any kind is like the wound which never has healed. Incest is a sore which—when bumped—re-opens, festers and gets increasingly worse."

'Penalties for abusing animals were more severe than those for abusing children.'

—Social worker

are often weak and not enforced. Penalties for abusing animals, she said, were more severe than those for abusing children.

While incest is forbidden by law, even the word and its discussion is a social taboo. It has been described by members in Christian circles as another of "Satan's acts to destroy the family." On the other hand, there is also, the liberal phraseology sometimes scribbled on public restroom walls, "Incest is best."

Until the age of five, Sharon lived with her 'natural family.' She remembers an unhappy childhood—parental beatings, an alcoholic father and little financial income.

She remembers well her parent's frustration and the bruises she received. But she also remembers the sexual relationship between her mother and her father's brother, and the incestuous relationship between her younger brother and herself.

Living groups file old tests for students' study guides

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

Students from organized living groups may enjoy a slight advantage in some classes by having access to test files that are maintained by those living groups.

The files, consisting mainly of old exams contributed by members of the living group are used by students as study aids for exams.

Some filing systems are complete and updated and some are not.

Stan Biggs, sophomore in finance and scholarship chairman for Haymaker Hall, said Haymakers' filing system is terribly outdated and few residents use it.

Mark Darrah, sophomore in pre-dentistry and scholarship chairman for Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity, said their filing system consists of old tests and a few class notes.

"Not enough people use them though," Darrah said. "We have files on 120 classes. The chemistry files are the most complete. Classes like Livestock and Fluid Mechanics are lacking."

KIM THOMPSON, sophomore in home economics and member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, said their scholarship committee is in charge of their filing system.

"It's pretty organized," she said. "About half of the girls use it."

Some living groups keep teacher profiles in their files.

"We like to keep a little report of the teacher, telling whether she basically goes off the book or lectures (on tests), so you know what to zoom in on," according to Dawn Heist, sophomore in general and member of Alpha Chi Omega sorority.

Heist said about 70 percent of the girls use the files.

"We really emphasize it," she said.

RCEN enrollment begins final week

By SCOTT STUCKEY
Collegian Reporter

Enrollment in the Regents Continuing Education Network's (RCEN) spring courses begins its final week Wednesday in Umberger 305. The weekly classes started last Wednesday, but enrollment will be permitted at the second meeting of each class.

Offered through the Division of Continuing Education, the classes are taught through a two-way amplified telephone system known as "Telenet." The system links students from 28 communities across Kansas to their teachers at Regent universities in Manhattan, Emporia, Hays, Pittsburg, Wichita and Lawrence.

"Most of these classes serve as an enhancement for professionals," RCEN Director Jan Kruh said. "Many people enroll who are studying to become teachers or are already teaching."

Other classes are geared for day care center workers, health care personnel, social workers, law enforcement personnel and insurance agents, Kruh said.

Full-time K-State students can earn from one to three hours credit in graduate courses without paying the fee required of non-students. The credit is given at the instructor's university but can be transferred to K-State, she said.

In its seventh year, Telenet's enrollment grew to 1,200 across the state during the fall semester, Kruh said.

Information about spring courses can be obtained from the RCEN at 532-5995.

Ford, according to Connie Secrest, senior in accounting and Ford Hall scholarship chairman.

Secrest said the files were used quite a bit last semester, mostly before finals.

"Our files contain mostly tests. I don't feel we should keep notes because the person should go to class to get them," she said. "And we don't keep any themes."

SECRET SAID the files are helpful if the student wants to get an idea of what kind of test the teacher might give.

Living group members contacted said they didn't think the filing system created an unfair advantage over students who didn't have access to them.

Biggs said he didn't think there was anything wrong with the filing system.

"When teachers hand tests back semester after semester, they become available for anybody's use," he said. "It's just an organized method for getting to them."

"It's just one of the advantages of living in the dorm or a Greek house," according to Secrest. "If anybody really wants an old test they're going to get hold of one."

The Greek sources contacted said they agreed that file systems are an advantage of organized living groups.

Vice president for Academic Affairs John Chalmers said his only concern is that not all students are aware they have access to test files.

Many instructors do keep old tests on file for students, either in Farrell Library or in departmental libraries.

THE RESERVE desk at Farrell Library keeps an index of instructors' names that tell whether they have any tests on file. Students may check out file material for two hours at a time.

Changes mark orientation, one-day meetings planned

By JANET DAVISON
Collegian Reporter

Shorter orientation periods for freshmen and an extension of orientation itself are changes in this year's orientation program, according to Marilyn Trotter, assistant director of the Center for Student Development.

These changes are the result of efforts by K-State's administration to make orientation more convenient for students and their parents.

Instead of the usual two-day orientation period for freshmen, they will only be required to come for one day, Trotter said.

The orientation period has been extended to the months of July and August to accommodate students who can't come in June, she said.

"This is a trial year," Trotter said. "We've never done it this way before. We don't know how this will work. Hopefully very well."

Orientation leaders for this summer were selected last semester by a six-member committee, she said.

"They're usually selected in September," she said. "This is because of a training class they have to take second semester. We also have two workshops in December before finals to prepare them for January."

Orientation leader applicants go through three selection processes before the final group is chosen.

They fill out an application blank, go through group interviews and are interviewed individually by the selection committee. The committee then chooses 14 orientation leaders and two alternates.

Lon Kruger is following in Jack Hartman's footsteps

By DICK WAGNER
Collegian Reporter

Still minutes remained before tip-off for the game between Kansas State and the Soviet Union National Team. A glance at the Russian bench revealed the USSR coaches laughing and talking, obviously enjoying the circus atmosphere of Ahearn Field House.

At the opposite end of the court was the K-State bench from where two figures coolly, but intensely scanned the floor. The appearances of the pair were so strikingly similar that it seemed like a double mirage of sorts. Both several reasons, but one particular one, stood among the rest, Kruger said.

"I think, because of Coach Hartman," he said was the reason he returned. "Of course, Kansas State and the people in general were also factors. But in this case, I had played for him for four years and already knew his system."

WHILE PLAYING for Hartman, Kruger was the Wildcats' Most Inspirational Player for three consecutive years. As the Wildcats floor leader, Kruger led them to the Big Eight title twice and one second place finish. In 1973 and 1974 he was named the conference's Player of the Year.

"You hear and read many times about a player being a coach on the floor," Hartman said of Kruger, "and Lonnie comes as close to projecting that image as any kid I've seen. He has a great feel for the game. He plays and coaches with total involvement."

Kruger, who ranks eighth on the K-State all-time scoring charts with 1,063 points, was always dishing out assists on the floor as a player. He now thanks his teammates for assisting him in winning the league's highest honor in '73 and '74.

"I think in my case I was fortunate to be on a championship team," Kruger said. "When it comes down to it, they really had to select someone from the winning team. I was only one of two or three players that could have won it. I'm sure I wasn't the best player in the league."

WHEN asked to compare playing for Hartman to coaching with him, Kruger just chuckles. But then he gets serious once again.

"I think as a coach you see more of the reasoning and thoughts of what goes into a decision. As a player, you just see the end result of the thinking."

When he eventually lands a head coaching position somewhere, Kruger said he will probably be almost an extension of Hartman.

"I think in philosophy that we may be very similar," he said. "The technique of transferring that to the players has to be an individual type thing, but I think that the style of play and the X's and O's will be very similar."

"I like him for his discipline and for his ability to get out of players as close to 100 percent as possible," Kruger said.

lasted so long that when he returned to the United States spring training had passed by and so had his baseball career.

"That ended it," Kruger said. "Perhaps that's the one thing I regret, is that I didn't stay with it (baseball) longer."

That wasn't the only disappointment Kruger was to experience in '75. In the fall, Kruger was asked to try out for the Detroit Pistons of the National Basketball Association. Although just 5-11, Kruger played for the Pistons through the entire exhibition season and then was the final player to be cut, the day before the season began. It was the first time for Kruger ever to be cut from an athletic team.

"It was a very good experience," Kruger said of the tryout and subsequent cut. "It (being dropped) wasn't anything shocking to me. I was released because they had five veteran guards. But it was a good experience because I was able to realize the feelings a person has when he has been cut."

THE AX the Pistons dropped on Kruger also cut all the cords between Kruger and his being a professional athlete. But it also cleared the path for Kruger to do what he's always wanted to do — coach.

However, as did Hartman, Kruger did not immediately return to his alma mater as an assistant. Kruger spent a year coaching at Pittsburg State, where he also picked up his master's degree.

He was lured back to K-State for were seated with their right leg crossed at the same precise angle over the left leg. The left arm of each was draped over the top edge of the chair to their immediate left. Both were dressed impeccably.

What appeared to be a like-father like-son routine was actually K-State Head Coach Jack Hartman and his assistant, Lon Kruger.

"I'd like to think that Lonnie looked at me as I looked at Mr. Iba," Hartman said, talking about the legendary Henry Iba, whom he played and coached under before beginning his own coaching career. "I'd like to think I've had that kind of influence on him."

IT WAS IBA who played a tremendous role in shaping Hartman and his philosophy, not just on basketball, but on life in general, the Wildcat mentor said. After playing basketball for Iba at Oklahoma State, Hartman left to play one season of professional football with Saskatchewan of the Canadian League. He returned to O-State in 1951 where he served as Iba's assistant until he became head coach at Coffeyville Junior College in 1956.

The route Kruger has taken thus far in his career is so parallel to Hartman's that the two routes are almost one. After playing varsity ball under Hartman at K-State for three years (1972-4), Kruger also joined the professional ranks in a sport other than basketball.

THE SILVER LAKE, Kan. native played a year of minor league baseball in the St. Louis organization. Then in the winter of 1975 Kruger traveled overseas to play basketball for a team in Tel Aviv, Israel. However, the season

Tide ends Kentucky string

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. (AP)—Reginald King notched 26 points as Alabama took advantage of crucial turnovers to dump top-ranked Kentucky 78-62 in a Southeastern Conference basketball game Monday night. The previously unbeaten Wildcats committed a number of offensive fouls and turned the ball over at critical times as Alabama played a full-court press all the way.

Kentucky, now 14-1 overall and 6-1 in the league, led early in the game at 8-6, but Alabama came back with 13 straight unanswered points midway in the first half and took a 19-8 lead. The Wildcats narrowed the advantage to three points with five minutes left in the half, but the Tide moved to a 41-32 halftime lead on a basket by Kent Looney at the buzzer.

King scored 19 of his total in the first half. Rick Robey had 28 points for Kentucky.

ALABAMA, now 11-5 in all games and 5-2 in the SEC, lengthened its lead in the second half as Kentucky again was plagued by the full-court press. Anthony Murray's jump shot with just over a minute left gave 'Bama an 18-point lead at 76-58.

In other college basketball action, Drury, ranked fifth in the NAIA, shot a sizzling 62 percent from the field to sail by No. 2 Marymount, 125-99.

Royals in Superteams meet

For those who are wondering what major league baseball players do while there is still snow on the ground, the answer is, if you are a member of the Kansas City Royals, you might be participating in Superteams competition.

The Royals will join the Los Angeles Dodgers, Dallas Cowboys and Denver Broncos in competition in the annual Superteams event February 10-14 in Hawaii.

The Royals will take on the Dodgers, while the Cowboys will square off with the Broncos during semifinal action to be held on Feb. 10-11. The semifinals winners will meet in the finals competition on Feb. 13-14.

ABC television will telecast the semifinals competition on Feb. 26 and March 5 and the finals on March 12.

The members of the 10 man team chosen to represent the Royals are Dennis Leonard, Paul Splittorf, Darrell Porter, George Brett, Fred Patek, Frank White, Hal McRae, John Mayberry, Amos Otis and Al Cowens.

Cowens will miss the competition because his wife is expecting a child. He will be replaced by Tom Poquette.

Kings need effective center

I'm sure many people in this area follow the Kansas City Kings, either in person or on TV, and wonder why they are losing so consistently.

The Kings are strong in several areas, notably rebounding and outside shooting. But their failings are the lack of a high-scoring center and a power forward, necessary ingredients for a winning team in the National Basketball Association.

Center is the Kings' biggest weakness. Sam Lacey is a good rebounder and occasionally scores well against the league's weaker centers. And Tom Burleson is a good back-up center, specializing in rebounds and blocked shots.

No cheers from the pressbox

Yet both centers are weak in the area the Kings need most, scoring. Lacey and Burleson together are averaging less than fifteen points a game.

A high scoring, intimidating center such as Bill Walton or Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is essential in the NBA. The Indiana Pacers recently displayed that belief when they traded high scorer Adrian Dantley to the Los Angeles Lakers for rookie seven-footer James Edwards.

In last years draft, the Kings had a chance to acquire a top-notch center in Kent Benson. But the Kings lost a coin toss and Benson, to the Milwaukee Bucks.

Then the Kings made their second mistake. They passed up Marques Johnson, a power forward from UCLA, to draft flashy guard Otis Birdsong of Houston. The Kings reasoned that they were strong at forward with Scott Wedman, Richard Washington and Bill Robinzine.

TRUE, the Kings do have good forwards, but they lack a good power forward who can combine good rebounding and scoring. Both Wedman and Washington can score well, but they both get pushed around on the boards. Robinzine is tough on the boards, but is not a consistent scorer.

Muscle is a major part of the NBA. Finesse players have a difficult time as they are intimidated by more physical players.

The guard situation at Kansas City is now shaky due to injuries to Lucius Allen and Birdsong. But Ron Boone and John Kuester have been playing well in their absence.

If Johnson, who is a prime candidate for NBA rookie of the year, had been drafted by the Kings, he would have added more to the team than Birdsong. Although Birdsong has played brilliantly at times, he tends to be inconsistent, self-centered and wild.

JOHNSON is a much more disciplined player. He plays tough inside and shoots well from the outside, in addition to playing effective defense. Johnson has become a superb player for the Milwaukee Bucks.

But perhaps Johnson's most important function would have been to create some competition among the forwards. Wedman and Washington are too complacent this year, knowing that none of the other forwards are talented enough to take away their starting roles.

Johnson would have pushed Wedman and former teammate Washington hard for a starting assignment. He would have forced them to work harder and thus have improved the team as a whole. And Boone, Allen and Kuester could have handled the guard duties just fine without Birdsong.

But there's no use moaning over what could have been. Let's just hope the King's recognize their deficiencies and correct them by next year, via the draft or through trades.

Record number of teams entered, defending intramural champs ready

A record number of teams, 386, will open play in six divisions tonight as Recreational Services' intramural basketball gets under way.

Schedules of the season, which will run through March 9, are available in the Recreational Services office.

Delta Tau Delta is the defending champion in the 28-team fraternity division.

STEVE WELLMAN, 6-5, and 6-3 Bob Riordan are the Delts' returning starters.

Although the Delts lost both starting guards to graduation, Wellman said his team will be taller and he anticipates a good season. Delta Tau Delta is in the same division with Kappa Alpha Psi, Alpha Tau Omega and Tau Kappa Epsilon. Wellman said he expects heavy competition from these teams.

Haymaker Two is the defending champion in the 31-team residence hall division. Dave Morell, who played for Haymaker last year, said most of his teammates have moved off-campus. He said Haymaker won't be as competitive as last year.

The Manhattan City Jazz finished second in the 176-team independent division last year. Jeff Krueger, 5-11, along with 6-3 Steve Lampone, 6-5 Jim Miller and 5-11 Jerry Krueger are the Jazz's returning starters.

KRUEGER said his team had not been practicing because of the lack of court space in Manhattan due to the number of people playing.

The Hot To Trotters are the defending champions in the 37-team women's division. The Trotters return 5-5 Tammy Roberts, 5-3 Karla Stoddard, 5-4 Janell Poppe and 5-5 Patty Bambick.

Stoddard said the Trotters have four freshman over 5-6. The blend of height and experience makes her confident of a good year, she said. She expects competition from Etcetera, Etcetera, Etcetera, the team they defeated in the finals last year.

The Boozers lead the list of hopefuls in the co-rec division. The defending champions return 6-0 Kathy Teahan, 6-1 John Boozers and 6-4 Rod Staats.

The recreation division, which is new this year, has 58 teams. No champion will be crowned in this division.

Water basketball play also begins this week. Schedules for the opening round of games Wednesday night are available in the Recreational Services offices.

Class schedule policy affects few

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

The policy of cancelling class assignments not picked up during registration apparently hasn't affected many students, according to E.M. Gerritz, dean of Admissions and Records.

"We didn't cancel class assignments until Tuesday after registration was over," Gerritz said. "We saved schedules for those who let us know they wouldn't be able to make registration Monday or Tuesday. As long as we had any notion the student was coming, we held the class schedule."

Gerritz said his office had received word from 120 students that they were not able to make it back for registration. Road conditions were a problem for many, Gerritz said, and all who notified his office had their class schedules held.

APPROXIMATELY 450 class schedules were cancelled after registration Jan. 17.

"Some of the people will show up," Gerritz said. "I'm sure some of them have changed their plans since they pre-enrolled last semester."

Donald Foster, director of records, said it was hard to tell how many of the students registering late had to go through the entire process of enrollment again. He said some students said they had to enroll a second time when they went through late registration, but there were probably others in the same situation that didn't mention it.

"We will find out in a couple of weeks just how many students had to go back through and enroll again," Foster said. "But in the past, about 450 has been the number of class assignments we wound up dropping after late registration was completed."

Foster said one reason the Office of Admissions adopted the new procedure of dropping class schedules was so spaces could be opened up as quickly as possible for students wanting into closed classes. Also, instructors can be given a more accurate roll count on the first day of class with the new method, according to Foster.

GERRITZ said he didn't think many of the students registering late were those who had their schedules cancelled.

"Evening classes are included, so in a way they are late since they are outside of the regular registration time," he said. "But in another way they are not. We make this time for evening and special classes."

Students can still register for the spring semester until Jan. 27, Gerritz said. After that date a student will need permission from his or her dean.

"We hate to cancel class schedules because we double our time, as well as the students', to re-schedule them," Gerritz said. "But we need those places in classes for students who are here."

K-State Credit Union bars all undergraduate students

By CLIFF BERNATH
Collegian Reporter

Although K-State Credit Union is located on campus, memberships for undergraduates are not permitted.

The credit union bylaws exclude all undergraduates from membership and the only students allowed to become members are those graduate students who hold the equivalent of four-tenths graduate assistantship at K-State.

Other persons eligible for membership are people employed at or by the University, employees of the credit union and their families and organizations of such persons.

The only relationship the credit union has to the University is its name and location, room 110 in Fairchild Hall. It is not supported by public funds or sponsored by the University, according to Delmar Salberg, treasurer-manager of the credit union.

SALBERG SAID the primary reason for excluding students from membership is that "most students do not have a steady, set income." Therefore, he said, there is no basis for a regular savings program and usually little collateral upon which to base a loan.

Selective membership is one prerequisite for obtaining a federal credit union charter under the Federal Credit Union Act of 1934. In his book, "The Federal Credit Union," John Croteau defines selective membership in terms of groups with definite bonds of association, occupation or residence.

The credit union has more than 1,900 members and $1.7 million in assets, according to the credit union's monthly newsletter. Based upon Credit Union National Association (CUNA) statistics, it is slightly smaller than the national average.

The credit union operates as a cooperative in which the members are shareholders. Salberg said that one share equals five dollars in savings and that dividends, the amount of interest earned by a saving account, are based on shares.

One difference between a credit union savings account and a passbook savings account at a bank, Croteau wrote, is that there is not a fixed rate of interest at the credit union. The dividend is determined quarterly by the board of directors.

In its newsletter, the K-State board declared a 6 1/4 percent dividend on all shares for the period Oct. 1 through Dec. 31, 1977.

Salberg said that dividend rates have never decreased during the two years he has been with the credit union.

ONE PROBLEM which most financial institutions face is loss due to people who default on loans. Salberg said there is currently in excess of $20 thousand in delinquencies, which is "less than the national average."

There is a reserve fund which covers these losses and the credit union reserve is "substantially more" than its delinquencies, Salberg said.

According to Salberg, the problem of loan defaults has decreased during the past two years. One reason is that the "board of directors is getting tougher," he said.

"We're not writing off loans. I don't believe in letting people off the hook that easily," he said. In addition to hurting the credit union, he said, the defaults could hurt the individual by encouraging him to continue a pattern of defaulting on loans.

Salberg said recovery usually involves court action to get a judgment against the person who defaults. This means that even if the union recovers the entire amount of the loan, it loses about one-third of that amount to court costs, he said.

"Recovering something is better than nothing," Salberg said, adding that recovery justifies the expense of such proceedings.

Although no one group of members defaults more than others, Salberg said that "generally, young people give us no more problems than older ones."

Changes in CD on city's agenda

Changes in Community Development Department's rehabilitation program will be discussed by Manhattan city commissioners at tonight's meeting.

During last week's meeting auditors showed there was no evidence of fraud by recipients of rehabilitation loans and grants.

The meeting tonight also will include a discussion of the second phase of pre-application for the Manhattan Municipal Airport redevelopment project.

According to airport manager Brent Kitchen, the second phase of pre-application will take into account all of the concrete work necessary to lengthen and strengthen the main runway.

Also slated for consideration is a request by Unified School District 383 that the city of Manhattan close and vacate Houston Street between Ninth and Tenth streets.

Currently, the street is closed between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. during the school year.

"We (the school board) are asking the city to close the street permanently," said James Benjamin, superintendent of the school district.

Farmers hear good news and bad

By CONNIE STRAND
Washington Correspondent
WASHINGTON—The five Kansas members of the House of Representatives have some good news and some bad news for farmers.

The good news, which they told about 200 Kansas farmers Tuesday, is that they are committed to equitable farm prices and pledge their time and support to bring about such prices.

The bad news is that they spent much of their time explaining the best ways for farmers to continue fighting for equitable prices as they don't expect any immediate legislative answers to farm problems.

The farmers, gathered in the House agriculture committee room, became heated just once.

That was when one farmer who predicted he would lose his farm within a year if something isn't done, told the Kansas delegation it would be forgiven for past mistakes, but every move the congressmen make will be carefully scrutinized from now on.

"We've been in this political system since last Wednesday and we don't like it," he said. "We've been run up one hall and down another, up one stairway and down another."

"This is a life and death matter, and when establishing your priorities, I desire and ask that you put your feelings across to others on the Hill."

"If it's going to take some time to rub each other's tummies in this social circle, take your time, but get something done," he said.

SECOND district representative Martha Keys (D-Manhattan) responded to the farmer's remarks by explaining that the political process requires that any legislation go through committee before going to the House, and said all members of the Kansas delegation drop some other legislation on which they had been working to insure the process get started.

"It's not fun and games, it's not a social club," Keys said. Her remarks were followed by hearty applause by the Kansas farmers.

Fourth district representative Dan Glickman (D-Wichita) told the farmers their lobbying efforts with the American Agriculture Movement (AAM) here during the past week have had "drastic effects."

"We want to get some legislative action, we want to hold some hearings," he said. "The pressure is on us to get our colleagues to do this."

"The only way is to force or compel the agriculture committee of the House and Senate to hold substantive hearings. This will take at least two weeks."

IN THE meantime, Glickman said, the farmers must continue to gain political support.

Keys said she is hopeful the farmer's efforts in the past week will result in Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland using his authority to produce immediate measures to help deal with the current farm surplus through loans and storage methods.

The Kansas representatives told the farmers to channel their efforts away from those who support their cause and toward those who have clout with urban groups.

Forbes touches all bases in first Landon Lecture

Malcom Forbes, president and editor-in-chief of Forbes Magazine, came to K-State Tuesday and spoke on a variety of subjects as the Landon Lectures series was launched for the spring semester.

Forbes, speaking Tuesday morning at McCain Auditorium, touched on problems the world faces with energy, inflation, peace and the American economy. He also took the opportunity to deliver Where We're Going", also included a special message for students.

Forbes said the energy problem is the main ingredient in the inflation problem.

Removing price restrictions would make energy more expensive so people would use and import less of it, he said.

"We're subsidizing the price we pay for gas by paying three times as much per gallon to bring it in from Europe and from the Mideast. It's a silly thing we're doing."

"It has created a dependence we have never had before and we are responding by importing more oil than ever because we have a lot of graduate economists down in Washington advising us on the problem," Forbes said.

"If there's anything Washington doesn't need, it's experts from the scholastic world because they manage to come to most of the wrong conclusions."

THERE ARE alternatives to importing oil, he said, but "currently, other alternatives are still more expensive than the subsidization."

Radioactive satellite raises fear after fall

YELLOWKNIFE, Canada (AP)—A nuclear-powered Soviet spy satellite fell from orbit into the atmosphere above this remote region of northwest Canada on Tuesday, streaking vividly and soundlessly across the pre-dawn sky and raising some fears of radioactive contamination.

Canadian and U.S. officials said there was probably no serious danger. But five American military airplanes, to be joined later by four Canadian planes, flew to the scene, 850 miles north of the U.S. border, to check for radioactivity and possible remnants of the fallen spacecraft.

"When it came overhead and we could get a good look at it, I could see dozens and dozens of parts," said Yellowknife resident Marie Ruman. "Each part had long, bright tail...as it was disappearing the main piece turned bright red. It was just fantastic."

IN MOSCOW, the official Soviet news agency Tass said the Cosmos 954 satellite had been designed to self-destruct in the event of such a fall. It has "ceased to exist," the agency said.

Canadian officials said any pieces of the satellite would have slammed into the earth in a sparsely settled area 60 miles east of Yellowknife, a frontier town of 8,000 on Great Slave Lake.

Canadian Defense Minister Barney Danson said he was "98 percent or more" certain the satellite, carrying 100 pounds of highly radioactive enriched uranium 235, had burned up in the atmosphere.

"I don't think there is any cause for hysteria," he said at an Ottawa news conference.

Danson told reporters that residents of Yellowknife, capital of the Northwest Territories, were not forewarned because it could have caused "unnecessary hysteria."

The chances that Yellowknife would be imperiled were "somewhat less than being struck by lightning," he said.

City commission authorizes solar airport preliminaries

By PERYN COMINSKY

Collegian Reporter

A motion to authorize Russell Reitz, acting city manager, to file the pre-application for the Manhattan Municipal Airport Project was unanimously carried at Tuesday night's work session of the Manhattan City Commission.

The second phase of the project would include extending and resurfacing of the main runway.

According to Schwab and Eaton, the consulting engineers for the project, the runway would be extended by approximately 2,000 feet to 7,000 feet. To accomplish this, the firm said, there would have to be some major land modifications surrounding the airport.

The estimated cost for the Airport Project, according to the engineering firm, is five million dollars. Ten percent of this would be paid by the City of Manhattan, the remainder would be paid through a grant given by the Federation Aviation Administration (FAA).

A PROPOSAL was also submitted to the commission by James Benjamin, superintendent of United School District 383, to permanently close Houston Street between Ninth and Tenth Streets.

Harry Wareham, long time resident of Manhattan opposed the proposal saying the street should be left opened to public access for several reasons.

"First," he said, "since the merchants of Manhattan are trying to promote the downtown area, the losing of Houston Street would be closing a convenient egress to the west part of town."

Wareham added that Houston Street belongs to the people of Manhattan as a whole, not just the school people.

PROPOSALS were also made to the Commission by the Community Development Rehabilitation Program.

The major thrust of the proposal, presented by Melody Williams, who is the redevelopment officer, was that the maximum amount of the loans be raised from $5,000 to $7,000.

Williams also proposed that the program be extended to the elderly and handicapped residents of Manhattan.

A vote by the Commission on Williams' proposal will take place within the next week or two.

Carter draws Forbes' fire as Landon Lectures continue graduate expressed a positive attitude about "where we're at" in the world today in terms of peace and the economy.

Saying that we now have more peace than war, he added, "Now the fighting is between the idiots and ideologies."

"In the Mideast, while peace isn't going to come easily, war does not now exist," nor will it exist "for the foreseeable year or two," Forbes said. "Peace is less in jeopardy than it has ever been."

Turning to the economy, Forbes said, "By most criteria, it's never been so good. Last year, four-and-one-half million more people in America were at work."

"Contrary to the '30s, farmers now have tractors, if unpaid for, to protest in," he said.

ANOTHER problem is inflation, which Forbes says is a euphemism for a tax.

"All you're doing is paying the most aggressive tax in the world for the luxury of an unbalanced budget. We don't understand the fact that the government doesn't make money—it prints it," he said.

Forbes also discussed President Carter, saying that "he is no bigger a problem than most we've had in that job."

Forbes added, "If you think your education is expensive, look at what it costs to educate the president."

The second part of the lecture consisted of advice to students:

"Get going. Don't spend the rest of your life in graduate school planning a career. Time is a quickly vanishing commodity."

"Sort out your priorities." Determine whether your goal is money, glory or independence. All are available but each is at the expense of others.

"Develop a sense of morality." Forbes defined morality as a set of values you bring to judge the actions of others.

Correction

John Egan of Salina Roofing, Inc. was quoted in Friday's Collegian as saying, "There were complaints that the people in the Architect's Office weren't competent. This bill would provide an overall house cleaning. Only those competent should be hired again." The quote should have been attributed to David Barclay, administrative assistant to Senator Norman Garr (R.-Westwood).

Subway crash injures 54

PHILADELPHIA—A 1940s vintage trolley packed with morning rush-hour commuters slammed into the rear of another street car at an underground station Tuesday, injuring fifty-four people.

The accident occurred at a busy station where one of the 19-ton electric-powered cars, which were built at the close of World War II, had stopped to pick up and discharge passengers.

Several people were hospitalized, primarily for observation. Many of those hurt complained of back pains, bumps and bruises. Several had bloody noses.

The crash was the fourth major accident involving rapid transit cars in an East Coast city in less than a week.

In Boston, 49 persons were injured last Wednesday and Friday when out-of-control cars rammed units stopped at stations. And 23 passengers were hurt, none seriously, on Saturday when two Southeastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority surface trains were involved in a rear-end crash between Philadelphia and nearby Norristown.

No welcome mat in Hawaii

HONOLULU—Paradise beckons, but only if you're visiting. If you want to stay, be prepared to find Hawaiians trying to yank the welcome mat out from under you.

"This state cannot accommodate every person who may wish to live here. It is that simple," says Gov. George Ariyoshi.

Ariyoshi, himself the son of immigrants from Japan, has called upon legislators to take drastic steps discouraging foreigners and residents of the other 49 states from setting up homes in Hawaii.

And despite doubts that Hawaii has much legal power to limit immigration, his ideas appear to have a strong base of public sympathy. A recent newspaper poll indicates 65 percent of the population believes something must be done to cut the number of newcomers.

Girl denies overexposure

ARGO, ILL.—Cynthia Forrest says she won't take coeducational swim classes because her religion tells her it would be immodest and high school officials say the 13-year-old girl may flunk gym and not graduate.

"Unless Cynthia can come up with actual, legitimate, religious tenets, she will have to participate in our physical education programs," said J.E. Connelly, Argo High School district superintendent. "The state law requires that youngsters take PE, unless there is a substantiated medical reason, and without four years of PE, Cynthia's not going to graduate."

Karen Forrest, Cynthia's mother, said, "We simply believe that it is wrong to show your body. The Bible states that you must wear 'modest' apparel. Myself and my church say that your body must be covered, particularly in the presence of the opposite sex. We would not go to the beach. We don't wear bathing suits or short skirts. We dress modestly."

EPA estimates high

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—Once cars get into buyers' hands and on the road, their fuel economy falls from 7 percent to 16 percent below the federal mile-per-gallon estimates posted on dealer showroom models, federal environmental officials reported Tuesday.

The higher the posted mileage, the bigger the drop, with 1977 subcompacts testing 19 percent—about seven miles per gallon—below the figures recorded on prototype cars and listed on showroom models.

Drive, walk with caution on campus

The Manhattan area has been besieged with snow lately and the weather bureau is predicting more.

K-State students have enough to worry about in trying to get to class on time, as well as trips to the Union, library, campus jobs or the student health center.

Whatever the reason(s), students now have to contend with hazardous campus conditions which include (a) ice and (b) motorists.

For the benefit of the Physical Plant, the Collegian would like to note ice may be found not only on sidewalks and roads, but also on stairways, bannisters and thresholds of doors. Some doors are jammed with ice.

THEN THERE are motorists on campus for business or using campus roads as shortcuts. The fact that some road markings for pedestrian crosswalks may be covered with snow and ice, and therefore invisible, does not excuse the drivers.

Signs posted at few and various points on campus clearly state that pedestrians have the right of way on this campus at all times. This regulation is seldom adhered to by motorists, and violators are seldom apprehended by patrolmen.

What with the mechanical hazards on campus, students—as well as faculty, staff and administration members—should drive with more caution and courtesy as motorists, and walk more defensively as pedestrians.

The Collegian believes the physical hazards should be attended to with a little more expediency.

K-State has responsibilities to agricultural problems

Editor,

The growing problems in Agriculture within the state of Kansas and throughout the U.S. must be of concern to all at K-State. The students, faculty and administration of this University are looked upon to provide leadership and awareness of this critical problem of our day. The responsibilities of the University are the responsibilities of all who use and participate in the functioning of this institution. The goals and objectives of this University cannot be met without a conscious effort by its members.

The students of K-State have been accused of apathy with regard to their involvement in political issues. This accusation is false; I believe that within the days to come the students of K-State will become the collegiate leaders of the nation in the promotion of agricultural issues. Here at K-State we have special responsibilities to see that farm production, distribution and continuation is insured.

NOW THAT spring semester has gotten underway, let us remember the sentiment which exists in our hometowns throughout the state. We must now exchange the ideas of the rural communities with those of the urban centers so each of us will begin to understand the needs of our friends.

I propose each group, club, newsletter and class address the agricultural problems. Every course and subject should look at the role it has played in regard to agriculture. Our history shows we exist to lend support to those who grow food for the people of the world.

As we approach the 115th anniversary of our founding as a land-grant college let us look to see what we have done. Only by public self-examination and critical analysis can we understand how K-State has participated and should participate in the future of Kansas and world agriculture.

Flinging feathers

Situated in the county of Douglas, surrounded on the east by Topeka and on the west by Kansas City, is a minor metropolis by the name of Lawrence.

There really isn't too much there of any significance to one driving by on Interstate 70, but spend one night there and I guarantee you will catch something.

The first thing a visitor notices upon entering the city limits is the overabundance of traffic signals. The city engineers have designed the most elaborate maze of little colored lights this side of Eudora.

THE FIRST-TIME visitor is advised to either pack a lunch or bring along a passionate member of the opposite sex when traversing the town. Failure to do so will result in terminal boredom.

After studying the traffic patterns of this jayhawk jungle one will soon realize this city is built around hamburger joints, banks and liquor stores. Judging by their vast numbers, it is obvious the first two are the cause of the third.

Continuing the drive to the western part of town, one can observe an epidemic of high-rise buildings shaped like cereal boxes. Housed in some of these containers are the reasons for the very existence of this dot on the map.

At last count, there were 21,000 reasons grouped under the title of Cosmopolitan University.

Situated in the stomach of Lawrence is the campus of Cosmo U. The campus is easy to locate—just look for a hill covered with concrete and brick eruptions.

ONE INTERESTING fun fact for the uninformed is that by the year 1993 all the buildings on campus will be connected by pneumatic people tubes (coined feather flingers) in order to facilitate changing classes. The reason for this mode of transportation is that the buildings are constructed so close together there is no room to open doors to the outside.

A new $1.9 million museum is also being built to house the last living artifacts of the campus—17 trees and 12 square feet of grass. The museum was donated by the alumni from spare change left over from last year's donut kitty.

The mascot of Cosmo U. is a rather homely creature sporting the unlikely colors of red and blue. It has been said the only positive attribute of this bird is its unusually large beak which is ideal for opening beer cans.

Probably the most impressive sights at this campus are the actual students. Cosmo U. at one time was the place to find hippies in Kansas. This has changed now. Most of the males seen traipsing around the campus could be mistaken for computer salesmen.

ON THE other side, the women at Cosmo U. have the reputation of being the best educated and endowed with the finest of physical attributes of any Kansas City suburb. Unfortunately for male visitors, Cosmo U. women have a tolerance for alcohol that can wipe out the resources of the unsuspecting before the desired effects are attained.

One word of advice to those who decide to vacation for a weekend in Lawrence: do not wear any article of clothing with the color of purple. When seeing purple, anyone affiliated with Cosmo University (especially during sporting events) will automatically yell out a list of excrementous nouns in a fit of jealousy.

Less ice on the steps, please

My shoulder hurts. And I get mean when I'm in pain.

So I'm going to give some credit where credit is due, and it's not a pretty story.

The K-State campus is, of course, covered with snow.

And ice.

The sidewalks, footpaths, streets, parking lots and pigeons all have varying amounts of snow on them.

This is understandable.

What I object to is dangerous ice conditions on concrete landings and accessways to buildings on campus.

I don't know how bad this problem is campus-wide, but here at Kedzie Hall we just about have to rope up in teams and traverse the "ice-stairs" with ice-axes and crampons (mountain-climbing boot spikes).

THIS CONDITION exists on the west side of Kedzie as well as the east side, where I almost met my doom on Monday.

It was a silly accident.

I was walking (briskly, as is my custom) out the east door of Kedzie and tried to stop as I stepped onto the exterior landing to allow right-of-way to two rather attractive girls coming in.

But I didn't stop.

I glided across a glass-smooth sheet of ice on the landing, my feet shot out into the air and I landed with a sickening thud on my back and rear on the concrete steps.

The two girls (who stared wide-eyed as I slid past) were looking at me with frightened expressions.

I got up and told them I was OK. They left. I called the cops.

A K-State Security and Traffic Patrolman responded within minutes.

HE GAVE me an accident form to fill out and assured me that he would contact the proper agencies in campus facilities to have something put on the ice to eliminate the dangerous situation.

Four hours passed.

Once more I had to head out the east door on the way to Anderson Hall. I was walking slowly, cautiously and painfully at this point.

Upon opening the door, I beheld a glistening sheet of ice, untouched by salt, sand, nut shells or whatever else could have been applied.

So I called the cops again.

Within the hour, some nut shells were applied.

Of course this did little for various bruised parts of my anatomy.

The nut shells should have been applied before heavy foot traffic converged on the entranceway (I fell at about 10 a.m.).

Now I'm not one to knock the physical plant (or department of facilities or whatever it's called this week) but in this case someone over there fell down on his job, so to speak.

Better luck next time, guys.

Cowpaths now concrete on campus

By LINDA BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

K-State students may have noticed new sidewalks in the southeast corner of campus coming from Aggieville, in front of Ackert, along Claflin across from Dykstra and at the International Center.

According to Paul Young, vice president of University Development, campus sidewalks are built by the University building crew with funds from the general maintenance budget. Approximately $10,000 to $12,000 a year is spent on sidewalk construction, he said.

Currently the Long Range Planning Committee is in charge of selecting where sidewalks should be placed, Young said. However, they are hoping to hire a landscape planner to assist them.

"University officials cannot predict exactly where sidewalks should be placed," Young said. "They can only try their best."

According to Young, one of the best places to build a sidewalk is a "cowpath" students wear in a normally grassy area. However this method is effective only to a point, he said.

"We can't build a sidewalk over every path or the campus would be all concrete," said Case Bonebrake, director of the Physical Plant. Other factors involved in the selection of where to place a sidewalk include available funding and benefits received by the addition of a sidewalk, Bonebrake said.

SINCE there is no fund allotted directly to sidewalk construction and maintenance, not all needed sidewalks can be built, he said.

According to Bonebrake, the Long Range Planning Committee must decide where the funds will benefit the most people. Only the sidewalks that will benefit the most students and are within the budget are built.

New buildings also affect the construction of sidewalks, Young said. For example, when the International Center was built, new sidewalks were added for access to the building.

"Every time a building is built you might change the pattern of walking," Young said.

Drumbeaters use a different kind of rhythm method

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP)—A bill to protect the jobs of drummers was almost drummed out of the Minnesota Legislature when lawmakers thought the word "rhythm" had something to do with birth control.

Sen. Collin Peterson proposed a bill to outlaw the commercial use of automatic drumming devices—sometimes called "rhythm units." Peterson, who makes his living as a musician, said the devices are being used to replace drummers in small dance bands.

The bill's rather technical description of rhythm units confused Senate officials Monday. Thinking it would ban a birth control device, they at first directed the measure to the Health, Welfare and Corrections Committee.

After discovering the mixup, the bill was forwarded to the Judiciary Committee.

Republican Hein to challenge Keys

State Senator Ron Hein, (R-Topeka), announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for Congress Tuesday at the Wareham Hotel in Manhattan.

Hein will be challenging Rep. Martha Keys.

In a prepared statement, Hein said one of the principal issues in the upcoming Congressional race is the extent of Federal involvement in American daily lives.

"No one would disagree that government has certain functions to perform for the benefit of society, but I believe that Congress has lost sight of the fact that we, the people, are indeed still able to make decisions for ourselves, and that we would be better off if we were permitted to make those decisions," Hein said.

Hein is an attorney with the law firm of Sloan, Listrom, Eisenbarth, Sloan and Glassman.

Cycling into spring will not be easy as bikeway construction still lags

By ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

The first phase of a three-phase bikeway construction program in Manhattan is nearing completion.

Bruce McCallum, Manhattan city engineer, said the plans for the bikeways are divided into three phases. The first phase provides bicycle access to the K-State campus, parks and the downtown area. The second phase will provide bicycle routes in the school districts. The third and most expensive phase will provide access to recreational areas including Tuttle Creek.

McCallum said he isn't sure when all three phases will be completed.

"We're waiting for better weather and spring," he said.

McCallum said the first grant for the bikeways was for $40,000 which was 80 percent federally funded and 20 percent locally funded. The next grant received was $6,000—70 percent federally funded and 30 percent locally funded.

"The other day we received a $4,000 energy conservation grant," McCallum said.

THE GRANT is promotional and encourages energy conservation, he said.

Bike routes on campus have already been constructed near the Military Science building and on the east side of Danforth Chapel.

"The street system on campus will be changed," McCallum said, "The street in front of the physical plant will be one way."

"This will give better traveling circulation and give a chance to experiment with the bikeways," McCallum said.

There are two main reasons for a bikeway system in Manhattan, McCallum said.

"One reason is to promote bicycles and the other is for safety standards," he said.

McCallum said the city had trouble with a plastic material used to mark the bikeways.

"We'd put it down, then had to move it because it was in the wrong place. When we pulled it up, it pulled up chunks of asphalt. Then the next day it rained and washed the plastic off," McCallum said, "It was a bad batch of material and had to be sent back."

McCallum said he occasionally rides a bike, but said, "I doubt I will ride a bike because I live in a section of town without much traffic."

Coal slurry pipeline foes tell the other side in bill debate

TOPEKA (AP)—Foes of a proposed coal slurry pipeline which promoters want to build across Kansas have their say Wednesday, after the proponents urged a Senate committee Tuesday to endorse a bill to grant the power of eminent domain so it can be built.

The Senate Transportation and Utilities Committee is expected to vote on the measure Thursday.

The proposed pipeline, which got its start in 1974 when Wyoming's Legislature approved giving Energy Transportation Systems Inc. rights to the water needed to move the coal through the pipeline, would be used to transport coal to Arkansas for powering an electric generating plant.

Kansas would not get any of the coal, but backers said this state would benefit from taxing the pipeline, materials purchased here for its construction and the payroll of manpower needed to build it.

Besides those tangible benefits, the proponents argued Tuesday, it is time state governments recognized that changes are needed to meet the energy crisis and to let this free enterprise endeavor create some competition for the railroads.

Most of the opposition to the proposal comes from the railroads, who jealously are guarding their rail rights-of-way because they now hold the only means for transporting coal long distances in this country.

Idled land risks grain surpluses, Bergland says

WASHINGTON (AP)—Idling 50 million acres of farm land in an effort to boost crop prices would jeopardize U.S. grain surpluses, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland said Tuesday.

Bergland, rejecting the proposal for more idle farm land, told the Senate Agriculture Committee that bad weather or foreign food demand could wipe out American surpluses overnight.

The secretary said grain reserves and increased exports were needed to boost farm prices, which have fallen sharply in recent years because of bumper harvests.

Thousands of farmers and their families have conducted rallies, tractor parades and meetings with members of Congress this week in Washington to promote their demands for better prices.

A chief goal of the striking farmers has been a law granting them 100 percent of parity for their crops. Parity would equal in buying power those prices received by farmers in 1910-14.

Bergland has repeatedly rejected the idea of a legally guaranteed parity price.

Hundreds of striking farmers watched the hearings.

Rock singer dies from self-inflicted gunshot wound

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Terry Kath, a lead singer with the rock music group Chicago, killed himself Monday when he put what he thought was an unloaded gun to his head and pulled the trigger, police said.

Police investigator Tim Yost said Kath, 31, of Malibu, Calif., was at the suburban Woodland Hills homes of Don Johnson, one of band's technicians, when the shooting occurred.

Kath, his wife and Johnson were having a party and drinking, Yost said.

Kath earlier had put another pistol to his head and pulled the trigger several times, but that gun was not loaded, Yost said.

Then he picked up an automatic pistol, put in a clip, and put that to his head, telling his wife and Johnson, "Don't worry, it's not loaded."

Yost said the automatic pistol belonged either to Kath or his wife. He said there was no immediate explanation why Kath had taken the gun to Johnson's house. But he added, "For now, we're listing it as an accident."

Kath, a native of Chicago, listed his favorite hobbies as motorcycle riding and guns.

"I do target shooting, but I prefer just to go out into the desert and shoot at beer cans," he once said.

Blue Key and Mortar Board accept applications for '78-79 membership

By CARLA SPEHART
Collegian Reporter

Students interested in applying for membership to the coeducational senior honorary societies, Mortar Board and Blue Key, must act by Friday.

Applicants must be juniors and have an accumulative grade point average of 3.3 or higher to be considered for Mortar Board, according to Joyce Mitchell, advisor of the group.

"Selection is based on an evaluation of leadership of the student and their service to the University," said Mitchell.

Membership to Mortar Board ranges from 22 to 28 members Mitchell said. This year's membership is approximately one-third male, she said, and about one-half of the members are Greek. Mitchell said the ratios vary each year.

Current Mortar Board members review all applications. Final selection will be made within a few months, Mitchell said.

NOMINATIONS for Blue Key are due by Friday, but applications will be accepted until February, according to David J. Mugler, advisor of Blue Key.

"Blue Key is not looking for joiners but leaders," Mugler said.

No specific grade point average is set, but Mugler said applicants should be in the top 35 percent of the junior class in their colleges.

"Blue Key is open to everyone," Mugler said.

Emphasis is placed on active leadership qualities, Mugler said, since Blue Key is a service organization to the University and local community.

Nominations, required by all applicants, are accepted from student advisors, living groups or current Blue Key members, Mugler said. The nominations are forwarded to Anderson 104.

Blue Key members will screen applicants and make the final selection, Mugler said.

Applications for Mortar Board and Blue Key are available in Anderson Hall 104.

Task force reports findings of survey

By DAVE HUGHES
City Editor

Members of the Manhattan and Riley County Commissions, Unified School District (USD) 383 and K-State met Monday noon to report on issues and projects with which those bodies are involved.

Lowell Jack and K-State journalism professor Robert Bontrager reported on a November community rating survey sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Jack was chairman of a Chamber task force appointed to conduct the survey.

Jack said Bontrager's "Formation of Public Opinion" class was asked for assistance in conducting the survey.

The survey was conducted to "feel the pulse of Manhattan and determine what was on the mind of the people," Jack said.

City planner Gary Stith said the questions chosen for the survey were too broad to be meaningful.

STITH, referring to the questions on zoning regulations didn't specify whether the respondents thought there were too many regulations, too few regulations or bad regulations.

Citizens were asked their opinions on issues ranging from adult education opportunities to the quality of public services to the condition of public utilities.

Bontrager said over 600 persons were selected for the survey but only 450 were contacted.

City attorney Ed Horne informed those at the meeting of the revision of Manhattan's fireworks ordinance.

The revision restricts the sale of fireworks to the period of July 3 through July 5; regulates the time of day fireworks can be sold, eight a.m. to midnight; restricts the zones where fireworks may be sold

Mitchell sustains arterial surgery

WASHINGTON (AP)—John Mitchell underwent surgery Tuesday for repair of an artery in his abdomen and his doctor said the 64-year-old former attorney general came through the operation in good shape.

Mitchell was reported resting "relatively comfortably" in the surgical intensive care unit at Georgetown University Hospital.

In the three-hour operation, Dr. Charles A. Hufnagel removed a large abdominal aortic aneurism extending from below the navel to the breastbone. An aneurism is a weakness, or ballooning, of the artery. One of Mitchell's doctors called it "life-threatening."

Doctors said he will be hospitalized about two weeks.

Mitchell, along with former Richard Nixon aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, was convicted of obstructing justice and lying under oath during the 1974 Watergate trial. Each man was sentenced to serve 2½ to eight years in prison. The time for each later was cut to one to four years.

Mitchell began serving his sentence at Maxwell Air Force Base prison camp in Alabama last June 22.

He was furloughed just before Christmas to be examined for possible replacement of his arthritic right hip. During that examination, doctors found a mass in the abdomen.

Mitchell's furlough from Maxwell expires on Friday, but there is nothing to bar the Bureau of Prisons from granting an extension.

Even though he is not in prison, Mitchell is receiving credit for serving time. He remains eligible for parole on June 21.

and bans the sale and firing of bottle rockets.

"The larger purpose (of the ordinance) is for uniformity between Riley and Pottawatomie Counties, and between Manhattan and Ogden," Horne said.

County Commissioner D.E. Parker said Pottawatomie County was interested in enacting a fireworks ordinance similar to Manhattan's.

Also at the meeting, James Benjamin, superintendent of USD 383 schools, said the remodeling of Manhattan junior high school should begin in April.

Funds for the construction were provided when the school bond issue was passed in November.

Committee delays action on abortion bill, meets stiff opposition from both sides

TOPEKA (AP)—The Senate Ways and Means Committee delayed action Tuesday on a bill restricting state financing of abortions for welfare recipients after the measure met with stiff opposition from both sides of the issue.

However, the committee approved a bill establishing a medical scholarship program in Kansas, but at lower tuition levels in accordance with recommendations by the Board of Regents.

In an effort to save the abortion bill, Sen. Wint Winter, committee chairman and sponsor of the measure, said he would try to amend the proposal to limit abortions only to cases when the mother's life is in danger or when pregnancy is the result of rape or incest.

Because of the broad language in the original proposal, both opponents and proponents of abortion found fault, making the bill's survival doubtful.

WINTER said the amendment is designed to gain some support from anti-abortion factions by narrowing the bill.

A new date for consideration of the measure was not announced.

The medical scholarship proposal approved by the committee would create a program in which medical students who agree to practice in Kansas following graduation would have their tuition paid by the state. Those new doctors leaving the state would be obligated to pay back the cost of their education.

The Kansas Board of Regents last week announced it will raise medical school tuition to $3,000 a year, nearly triple the current figure.

The measure had proposed tuitions equal to about one quarter of the cost of education the students, or about $4,750 a year.

John Conrad, Regents executive officer, admitted under questioning the board's decision to raise tuitions came largely as a result of the Legislature's action on the scholarship program.

Under the bill, students who agree to practice in underserved areas of Kansas would be eligible for an extra $500 a month stipend.

UFM's statewide program helps educate rural Kansas

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

They gathered around the crackling fire and opened the book, "The First Circle," and listened as the discussion leader read these words from the translator's note.

"The word 'sharashka' as it occurs in this story derives from a Soviet slang expression meaning 'a sinister enterprise based on bluff and deceit.'"

The gathering isn't a Communist breeding site, but a free university class discussing the Russian, novelist Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn.

The class and the movement do," Embers said. "They know who to ask—like who's the bread baker in town."

"One guy is interested in Olsburg history and will be having a class on that," she said.

Although the community is used to doing projects, (the townspeople built a restaurant and tennis court), Embers believes OREO is profitable because it has brought people together; not only for community projects, but education as well.

Free universities provide opportunity for communities to know its biggest resource—people.

"Community education provides are interested in credit courses and more than 50 per cent are interested in non-credit, life-long learning.

Community base programs began in 1975 when UFM received a two-year federal grant and a dozen Volunteers In Service To America (VISTA) workers to establish 12 projects throughout the state.

The goal was to establish self-sufficient universities, according to Sue Maes, UFM director.

"As of last summer, 10 of the 12 were running under their own auspices," Maes said.

Because the program is totally volunteer, costs are minimal.

"The Olsburg project cost essentially nothing because the bank donated the necessary funds," he said.

The Clay Center project costs $4,500, with the majority of the cost used for salaries, Killackey said.

ONLY two of the 12 projects started have failed. According to Killackey, one was due mostly to organization details and the other because of financial disputes. The county commission wanted to charge for registration and the free university board didn't.

Based on the success of the previous projects, UFM applied and received another federal grant of $66,000 last August, to be used for training and technical assistance in establishing the rural free universities.

UFM has changed its outreach objectives from initiating the programs, to helping interested communities in establishing their own programs.

Elements necessary to start a free university in a community are a strong interest from the community and a few key people to work with the UFM staff, Killackey said.

Based on the interest from the communities and the variety and enthusiasm of the classes, Killackey doesn't believe rural Kansas is behind the times.

"Just because things are flat out there, doesn't mean things aren't happening," he said. "Free universities blow hell in the myth that there's nothing to do in rural Kansas."

'It gives the people the opportunity that wasn't there before, to express themselves and their abilities.'

behind it are part of a statewide project of Manhattan's University for Man (UFM), to bring lifelong learning, non-credit education to rural Kansas.

"What makes the community education program unique is the free university activities are designed so anyone can participate," said Jim Killackey, director of UFM's Outreach Program.

CLASSROOM and economic barriers are dissolved, he said. These barriers are sometimes created because of the differences in the level of education or economic status.

Class topics range from player piano restoration, quilting and chair caning to bull-riding techniques and Old Testament history.

Class offerings depend on the interest of the community. One town, Olsburg, recently started the world's smallest free university—Olsburg Rural Education Opportunities (OREO). People were the key in establishing OREO, according to co-founder Pat Embers.

"We're a pretty small town and it doesn't take long for word to get around," Embers said.

THE selection of classes also depends on the community.

"People who have lived around here know what other people can

Reddy receives legal summons

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP)—Popular entertainer Helen Reddy was personally served with legal papers Monday evening concerning her failure to appear and perform at the Kansas State Fair last September, Atty. Gen. Curt Schneider announced Tuesday.

Ms. Reddy was served with the papers by a member of Schneider's staff at the Sunrise Theatre in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

The papers were served in connection with a $100,000 lawsuit filed against the performer.

Schneider's office said she will have 30 days to answer allegations of the suit.

the mechanism for people to feel good about themselves and their community," Killackey said. "It give the people the opportunity that wasn't there before to express themselves and their abilities."

THE free university at Clay Center brought about more county awareness of the people and the talent they have according to Coni Witters, county coordinator for the program.

"We're more aware of the variety of the talent," Witters said. "The free university has caused a stronger county feeling because it's gotten people together and to intermix," she said.

Clay Center, the largest town in the county, is usually the focal point of activity. Because of the free university, the people in Clay Center are more aware of the surrounding towns and areas, she said.

According to Witters the free university has introduced new ideas with encouraging results.

"Because of the program, we've been able to introduce experimental things, like yoga and biofeedback, that otherwise we would have had to go to other places to get," she said.

The local mental health center would have brought the issues to the community, but probably wouldn't have had the turnout, she said.

THE success of the free universities is due to the interest adults have in this type of education.

A poll conducted by the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges last fall revealed six per cent of adults

Deans, line schedule differ on time block requirements

By TIM HORAN
Staff Writer

Depending on who a student asks, an adviser or an assistant dean, the requirements for the use of time blocks vary.

A time block is a way to tell the class scheduling computer not to schedule any classes for a student during a specific time period.

The inconsistency and confusion on who can use time blocks and who can't stems from what the University line schedule states, which is the only record concerning its use.

Part A, of the section, says: "An undergraduate student carrying less than 12 hours, who works more than 18 hours a week, may schedule work time by presenting a letter on letterhead stationery from his employer outlining the work hours required and the necessity for the special schedule. An undergraduate student carrying 12 hours or more is considered a full-time student and not normally eligible to schedule work time."

JERRY Dallam, associate director of records, said these requirements were wrong.

Dallam said that students who are dependent on one or more factors such as employment, family obligations, athletics or are commuting to campus may request time blocks and the requests will be honored. These factors must be verified by a letter from an employer or adviser stating the reason. The letter can be presented to Dallam or at the desk in the basement of Farrell Library during pre-enrollment.

He also said the number of hours a student was enrolled in had nothing to do with the request.

"By policy we have to allow you a lunch hour (40 minutes) but we don't turn down any request that can be verified," he said.

"We'll be the first to admit our system is not a good one, the selection process is out of date," he said. "The best we can do now is honor time blocks."

DALLAM also said advisers should encourage students to use the time blocks instead of going through the process of drop-add.

"It's (drop-add) a hassle for the student and it's a hassle to us. It's also expensive for us," he said.

Reports from students whose advisers said they were ineligible for time blocks prompted a Collegian survey of the colleges.

A reporter called the dean's office and asked what the eligibility requirements were for the scheduling of time blocks.

The person was given the opportunity to direct the caller to a person who could answer the question. In this way, the survey simulated what a student would do if he wanted an answer to the same question.

Marjorie Cleland, assistant dean of arts and sciences said a student is eligible if he works during the day and presents a letter from his employer.

"It's not an established policy but that's the easiest way," she said adding that married women and commuters were sometimes eligible. "We do this on an individual basis with a letter of explanation."

JOHN Dollar, assistant dean of engineering, referred the Collegian to what is stated in the line schedule.

Robert Lynn, dean of business, said basically the requirements involved employment but that there were others, such as family responsibilities.

"That's (employment) the only one I've run across," he said. "I'm sure there are others, like if a mother had to take a child to school at 8 o'clock or something similar but I've never had one of the latter."

Frank Carpenter, associate dean of agriculture, said:

"I have tended to tell students (other than those who are employed) to get the times they can get. Sometimes the machine will by chance leave that time space open."

Mike Finamore was told he had leukemia.
Nine years ago.

When Mike Finamore was thirteen years old, he was told he had leukemia.

At that time, this meant he had five, maybe six months, to live.

But just about then, leukemia research produced some dramatic results:

A special combination of drugs that would kill the leukemia cells in the blood and permit the person to live longer than ever before.

So Mike was treated. And it worked.

He didn't die.

Instead, he became one of the fortunate few to have leukemia and live. And today his weekly treatments enable him to lead a normal life.

In fact, right now he's putting the roof on a house he built himself.

And when it's finished there will be a double celebration.

The new house. And Mike's 22nd birthday.

Most people expect presents. Mike's happy just to have a birthday.

Quakes shake it fewer times in '77; volcanos spout off more than usual

WASHINGTON (AP)—There were fewer earthquakes than normal in 1977 but volcano activity returned to average with three times more eruptions than the year before, the U.S. Geological Survey reported Tuesday.

Survey officials estimated that 2,800 persons died in earthquakes in 1977 compared to an annual average of about 10,000 earthquake-related deaths.

By contrast, 1976 was the second worst year in recorded history with more than 700,000 persons killed in quakes, mainly in the great China earthquake. The highest number of deaths in earthquakes was recorded in 1556, when 830,000 died.

The Smithsonian Institution's Scientific Event Alert Network reported that more than 35 volcanoes were active in 1977, compared with only 10 the year before.

SEVENTY persons were killed in an eruption in Zaire. Among the unusual occurrences reported was the spewing of lava from a drill hole in Iceland.

"The dramatic increase in volcanic activity in 1977 reflects a return to a more normal level of two or three dozen eruptions a year rather than any fundamental change in the rate or intensity of global volcanism," said Dr. Robert Tilling, chief of the geological survey's Office of Geochemistry and Geophysics.

Survey officials say the 10 eruptions of 1976 amounted to an unusually low number compared with the 35 in 1977 and about 24 each in 1974 and 1975.

Tilling noted that the United States produced its share of activity, with the eruptions of Akutan and Pavlof in Alaska and spectacular lava flowing from Kilauea in Hawaii.

Geological Survey quake watchers reported 14 earthquakes which equaled or topped 7.0 on the Richter scale in 1977, compared to a long-term average of 19 quakes of that scale.

THE RICHTER Scale measures movement of the earth and the energy expended increases 10 times for each one point increase. A quake of 7.0 can do considerable damage. The 1906 San Francisco quake has been estimated at 8.3.

Most of the earthquake deaths last year were recorded in Romania, where 1,400 were killed March 4. In addition, deaths were reported in three quakes in Iran and others in Indonesia and Argentina.

Waverly Person, a geophysicist at the survey's Golden, Colo., earthquake center, said quake activity in the United States also may have slowed during the year.

"So far we have received reports on only 372 distinctly separate earthquakes that were reported felt in 30 states in 1977, compared with 414 quakes reported felt in 33 states in 1976," Person said.

The largest U.S. quake of the year was 6.7 magnitude in the Aleutian Islands off Alaska. There were 20 quakes reported during the year, causing minor damage in 11 states.

Calendar of top religious holidays designed for faculty's reference in scheduling tests

A calendar of major Jewish, Christian and Islamic religious holidays, for use by faculty members in scheduling test dates, is being composed by Religious Activities Committee of Faculty Senate.

Carole Francq, chairman of Academic Affairs Committee, said the major reason for compiling the list of holidays is to make the faculty aware of the holidays when conflicts arise for students between tests and holidays.

"There have been times when somebody didn't show up for class on a test day, and their reason for not being in class was that it was a religious occasion," Francq said.

DON FALLON, chairman of Religious Activities Committee, said teachers are encouraged by the University to work with students when conflicts arise, although there is no policy requiring teachers to change test dates.

"The effort is not to set down a legalistic rule, but it is to alert the faculty members to the meaning of that day in the hopes that our faculty and staff will take into consideration in the scheduling of tests," Fallon said.

Students having tests scheduled on their religious holidays are responsible for informing their professor if they are unable to attend, Fallon said.

"The primary examples I've heard seem to be from legitimate members of a religious group where they are gone all day, like a Jewish High Holy Day," he said.

Religious holidays other than Jewish, Christian and Islamic will not be on the calendar because student membership in other religions is small, Fallon said.

Insulation work begins in spring

K-State will spend almost $400,000 this year to insulate some of the older buildings on campus.

Work will begin this spring on insulating attics in most of the older buildings on campus and the installation of energy-conserving windows according to Paul Young, vice president for facilities.

The University will spend $150,000 on the insulation and $243,800 on the windows. Farrell Library, Holtz Hall, Kedzie Hall and Calvin Hall will be the first halls to have the windows installed.

Funds for the project were allocated by the state as part of K-State's overall energy conservation program, Young said.

"We want the students to understand we are trying to do two things—keep energy costs down and keep everyone comfortable," said Vince Cool, vice president for University Development.

Traffic, library, Lafene and HPER; They have ways of making you pay

By PEGGY PATCHEN
Collegian Reporter

More than 450 students were delayed in registration last week due to overdue fees or fines.

"The policy at K-State is to withhold registration and records for students delinquent of fees, fines or other accounts due to the University," according to E.M. Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

Students at K-State will find this policy is strictly enforced.

"Students have traffic, library, health center, HPER and chemical breakage fines," said Michele Warmund, information worker at registration.

Fines range from $3 for people failing to clear lockers to $175 or $200 for parking tickets, Warmund said.

"Money gets even bigger with delinquency of loans," she said.

Students with unpaid fines receive a card at registration saying their assignment is being held because of financial delinquency and they should report to the information station.

AT ONE time during registration over 100 people were in the misuse fee line, Warmund said.

"I'm the first person who tells them about their fine," Warmund said. "The students get upset with me. It's not the employees fault for this. The students are warned and informed about it since May."

Library fines still were owed by 145 people during Monday and Tuesday of registration, said Rachel Moreland of the circulation department of Farrell Library.

"The smallest fine was $3.50 and the largest was around $40," Moreland said.

Sometimes fines aren't cleared through the various stages of the library fine system, she said.

"Because of this, a few students were charged with financial delinquency even though they had paid the fine," Moreland said.

She added there are several copies of each fine: two copies go to admissions and records, one to the dean of that student's college, one stays in the department and one goes to the student.

"We try to tell kids to keep their own receipt," Moreland said. "A receipt can speed up a student's registration immensely if he is charged with a misuse fee."

APPROXIMATELY 400 delinquent traffic fines were paid during registration, according to a Security and Traffic official.

The highest amount paid was around $200 and the smallest was $3, the official said.

"Most tickets were because of no ID sticker," according to Paul Nelson, security and traffic director.

"Students can save themselves a lot of money if they'd get an identification sticker."

For the past year, Security and Traffic has been pressing hard for payments of fines, Nelson said.

"We keep tickets clear back to 1957," he said. "People enrolling at K-State will still have to pay those fines before they can register."

"If the fines aren't paid after a certain amount of time and a certain amount of letters, we turn them over to the collection agency," Nelson said.

Around 150 students had towel and locker fines, said Don Kirkendall, head of health, physical education and recreation.

There was a tremendous rush for fine payments during registration, Kirkendall said.

"If students would turn in items when they are reminded, it would be a big help at a time we really need it," he said.

There is no sure way to collect delinquencies, according to Doug Hurley, assistant director of admissions and records.

For this reason, Hurley said, the delinquency policy may need to be reviewed on a regular basis to keep registration hassles to a minimum.

"Most students knew about their fine," Hurley said.

"Some students will come to the information desk before they even register. Some claim they weren't informed."

"I already knew I had a fine to pay," said Mariam Hughes, junior in interior design.

"I received a notice that I owed $46 to traffic and security," Hughes said. "But I always wait until the next semester to pay because I have more money then."

"I always get irritated, but I guess it's my fault. I should suffer the consequences," she said.

Lifesaving isn't only at swimming pools.

It's our guess you've never even heard of cardiopulmonary resuscitation—right? Well, there are some new lifeguards around these days, trained by the Heart Association in a lifesaving technique called cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR).

You'll see them in hospitals, industrial plants, ambulances, football stadiums . . . even large offices. Many are doctors, but others are firemen, nurses, ambulance and rescue personnel, policemen . . . and just plain people.

When someone's heart stops, his brain begins to die. Minutes count.

Prompt application of mouth-to-mouth breathing and chest compression keeps blood flowing to the brain. CPR can restore life, or sustain it until complete cardiac care can be started. Thousands of victims of sudden heart arrest have been saved by these CPR "lifeguards."

A lot is being done these days to prevent premature death, to save hearts "too good to die"—and the Heart Association is doing it. Your gift to the Heart Fund will keep us at it.

'Cats junior varsity coach Winston enjoys coaching, remembers career

By RICK DICKENS
Collegian Reporter

After a successful four year basketball career at K-State new grad-student coach Daryl Winston finds coaching enjoyable. Now the head coach of the junior varsity, Winston has guided his charges to a 5-2 record.

Winston said he learned a lot from coach Jack Hartman during his career.

"It has been an enjoyable experience for me," the former 6-5 center said. "I wouldn't trade it for anything. I've learned so much here, not only in basketball but in school as well."

The junior varsity's record is one of the team's best starts in recent years.

"No secrets to our success really, I try to let everybody play," said the Psychology-Sociology major. "The JV program here is set up to accomodate the incoming freshman, and fill in with walk-ons to fill up any gaps."

"In fact several players on the junior varsity are playing on the varsity this season, one even started in a game," Winston said, referring to Brent Murphy.

Along with his responsibilities as coach Winston is helping out the community of Manhattan with legal counsel for persons requesting such help at the Riley County Courthouse.

ALTHOUGH Winston enjoys his work with juveniles and first offenders, and helping the basketball team in any way he can, he would still like to be playing basketball.

"I had three offers, at least I thought they were very lucrative offers, to play pro ball," Winston said. "They just turned out not to be as lucrative as I thought, and then I decided to try my hand at coaching."

Many people, over Winston's four year stint as a player may have taken his talents in stride or taken them for granted, but Winston did not have to come to K-State, he had offers from several other well known universities, such as Southern California and was heavily recruited by KU.

One of his few bad experiences at K-State was the death of his life-long friend Dean Harris, who died wanted to get in there and help so bad. It was really frustrating."

IN THE beginning Winston thought it might be tough going as far as people taking his advice seriously.

"I really didn't know how seriously they would take my advice. The guys at the forward and center positions were really attentive and accepted my coaching very well."

Winston would not comment on the call which outraged most K-State fans against Marquette last year in the NCAA Regional Tournament. Winston made a tip-in and was fouled on the play.

A three-point play would have tied the game. But because he was fouled on the play the basket was disallowed.

Instead of commenting, Winston just smiled and said, "If we had played well the entire game it wouldn't have been close."

Winston has no regrets about his career at K-State.

"If I had it all to do again I wouldn't hesitate. I would go to K-State where I had fun."

Sports

in a car crash after their freshmen year.

"Dean was one of my best friends and of anything in college that happened to me, his death had to be the lowest moment for me," Winston said.

"We grew up together. We played against each other in high school. Our mothers went to high school with each other. It was a sad time for me."

WINSTON is unsure of his future as far as coaching at K-State, but he'd like to continue coaching at the university level.

"I will be in grad school next year and hope to be coaching on the college level. Coaching on the high school level just doesn't appeal to me," Winston said. "I've sent my resume into several colleges, and after this season is over it will just be a wait and see situation."

Sitting on the bench is new to Winston. He said he nearly ran out on the floor during his first game as a coach when the players were being announced.

"That first home game I sort of flinched, as to go out, and just caught myself in time. I had been doing that so long that I almost thought I had a year to go," Winston said.

"Sometimes it is very hard to sit on the sidelines and watch especially during the two Kansas games and the Nebraska game. I

'Skins select Pardee to fill coaching post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington Redskins owner Edward Bennett Williams announced Tuesday that the Redskins have signed former Chicago Bears Coach Jack Pardee to a multi-year contract. Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Pardee succeeds George Allen, who was fired Jan. 18 after seven seasons with Washington, taking them to five National Football League playoffs and the Super Bowl in 1973.

The 41-year-old Pardee resigned from the Bears the day after Allen was fired and met with Williams twice this week.

ALTHOUGH Williams talked with others, including several of the Redskin assistants, no one but Pardee was seriously considered for the head coaching post.

Allen served as both coach and general manager, but Williams said he would divide the duties between two men. The new general manager has not yet been named.

A standout linebacker for 15 seasons in the NFL, Pardee played in 196 games in 13 seasons at L.A. and two in Washington, interrupted by a stint as an assistant coach at Texas A&M in 1965 as he recuperated from surgery. He was more valuable as an on-field leader than as indicated by his statistics — 22 career interceptions, five touchdowns, 1963 All-Pro honors.

DURING his first year with the Bears in 1975, the club had a won-lost record of 4-10. The club was 7-7 in 1976 and last season made the playoffs for the first time since 1963 with a 9-5 record. Pardee's three-year contract salary reportedly was among the lowest in the NFL.

Despite loss to Crimson Tide Kentucky holds top spot

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Kentucky Wildcats still are the nation's No. 1 college basketball team, but their stature has been rocked by the Tide...the Crimson Tide of Alabama.

The psychologically aroused Tide, employing a full-court-press and a three-guard offense, swept past the Wildcats 78-62 Monday night, handing Kentucky its first defeat of the season after 14 victories.

HOWEVER, The Associated Press' weekly balloting among sports writers and broadcasters was based on last week's performances and conducted before Alabama ended the Wildcats' winning streak. The pollsters gave Kentucky all 56 first-place votes and 1,120 points.

"It was a bitter defeat, no question about that," Kentucky Coach Joe Hall admitted after the unexpected setback at Tuscaloosa, Ala. "They were psyched up and the crowd was going wild."

"I could have played the managers and it wouldn't have mattered," added Hall. "It was like a bantamweight jumping on a heavyweight and hitting him about 15 times before he could get his hands up."

Alabama, with an 11-5 record, was not among the Top 20, but the Tide enhanced its chances of entering the elite group next week.

K-State women open conference play against nationally-ranked Jayhawks

The K-State women's basketball team opens the state conference portion of their schedule in Lawrence tonight when they meet the rival Kansas Lady Jayhawks.

The 'Cats, who dropped games to Nevada-Las Vegas 113-84, UCLA, 123-62, and California State-Long Beach, 99-88, during a three game west coast trip last week, carry a 9-11 overall mark into tonight's game.

"If we play as well as we did against Nevada and Cal State we can beat KU," said 'Cat head coach Judy Akers. "But if we come out flat like we did against UCLA I'm not sure we could beat anybody around here."

K-State holds an 18-4 edge in the Kansas series, but one of these four losses came earlier this year when the Lady 'Hawks defeated the 'Cats 75-53 in the semi-finals of the Big Eight Tournament.

Eileen Feeney leads the 'Cats in scoring with an average of 13.6 points a game while Beth Boggs is averaging 10.7 and Laurie Miller 10.3 points a contest.

The Lady 'Hawks, who stand 11-5 overall and 1-0 in conference play, rank 20th in the national coaches poll.

Kansas is led by 6-0 freshman forward Lynette Woodward who is averaging over 24 points and 14 rebounds a game, and 5-9 junior center Adrian Mitchell, who averages over 21 points an outing.

Hunting legislation outlined

In the past the "Huntsman" and the "Angler" have been geared towards the "how to" of hunting and fishing. While this makes up a big part of the two sports, it is also important that hunters and anglers keep abreast of legislation and movements which will play a role in the future of hunting and fishing, allowing them to be informed and able to participate in shaping the future of hunting and fishing in Kansas.

The huntsman

With that in mind, this column will try and present information not only on the "how to" of hunting and fishing, but also the "how come" of the two sports.

The Kansas Fish and Game Commission is asking the 1978 legislature to adopt several pieces of new and revised bills.

THE PROPOSALS will help benefit wildlife, wildlife recreation and help improve commission operation.

THE FIRST of the bills proposes "license fees to be set by commission regulation."

License fees are now set by the state legislature. The bill would allow the commission to set the prices on 30 different licenses and permits. The legislature would retain the right to deny, alter and change fees.

Among some of the price changes proposed would be resident hunting license fees of not less than five dollars and not more than $15. The same price would apply to fishing licenses. There would also be a license for youths aged 12-16. It would not exceed five dollars. Land owners would also get a reduced fee for big game licenses, etc. The new prices will probably go into effect in 1980 if the bill is passed.

"COMPENSATION to the commission for wildlife taken illegally, termed 'liquidated damages,' is the second proposed bill.

Fines in the past were levied to deter poachers. The loss of the animal was ignored. This bill would assess certain fines for the loss of the animal. Deer, antelope and wild turkeys would cost $300 each. Any other game animal or furbearers would be $50 each and any non-game animal or game fish would cost $10 each.

"Money from fines on fish and game violations would be used for improved information and education on wildlife," is the third.

Money which is paid for fish and game law violations currently goes into the Kansas general fund. The bill would let the fines be paid to the commission for use in informing and educating the public on regulations, the concepts of conservation and ecology, and improving landowner-sportsmen relations.

"PLACING rabbits and hares under authority of the commission," is the fourth bill.

Rabbits and hares would be given the same status as game animals. The commission which now only controls bag limits would be given full regulatory power over rabbits and hares.

"Full peace officer authority to game protectors," is the fifth bill.

This bill would enable game protectors to act as peace officers if they came across someone violating the law, for example a couple of kids harvesting a crop of pot, or someone who is driving while intoxicated.

"AUTHORITY to the commission to sell non-drilling mineral leases," is the sixth bill proposed.

The proposal would give clear authority to the commission to enter into non-drilling mineral leases on lands where the commission owns the mineral rights.

"REMOVAL of military exemption from license requirements," is being proposed.

Military personnel would be subject to the same requirements as others when buying a resident license. As of now military people are not required to have lived in Kansas for 60 days to buy a resident license.

This was just a brief outline of each bill. If you would like more information or have a serious complaint it would be best to contact the Kansas Fish and Game Commission in Pratt, Kan.

Finley has optimistic outlook on trade

NEW YORK (AP) — Charles Finley, the supsalesman who built an empire on his ability to get doctors to buy malpractice insurance, testified that he had the right to sell his best player Tuesday, one day after the sale of his ballclub apparently fell through.

Finley, the no longer lameduck owner of the Oakland A's, testified to the validity of his December deal that sent left-handed pitching ace Vida Blue to Cincinnati for $1.75 million and minor league infielder Dave Revering.

Finley said he was optimistic that his deal would be allowed. "By gosh, it's about time I won one," he said.

FINLEY'S testimony came at a six-hour hearing at the office of baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn and its thrust was no different than the evidence offered Tuesday by two other interested officials, Bob Howsam of the Cincinnati Reds and Marvin Miller of the Players Association.

Miller, executive director of the Players Association, was here to protect the interests of Blue, who did not attend the hearing. According to Peter Rose, legal and administrative assistant of the association, Miller read a statement that declared that the commissioner "had neither the power nor the authority to disapprove the transaction ... There was no major league rule that was violated."

'Cats take to road for Missouri game

The K-State Wildcats, coming off a heartbreaking 56-52 defeat at the hands of arch rival Kansas travel to Columbia tonight to take on the Missouri Tigers.

The 'Cats go in to the game with a 2-3 Big Eight record and an 11-6 overall mark.

Missouri, who lost a nail-biter Saturday to Nebraska 56-55, also posts a 2-3 conference record, but the Tigers stand 9-8 overall.

Tonight's game marks the 159th meeting between the two schools with K-State leading the series 89-69. In the coaching department Wildcat coach Jack Hartman stands 11-8 versus the Tigers and Missouri coach Norm Stewart is 9-18 against the 'Cats.

K-State has pulled upsets at Missouri in their last two games there, posting an 88-77 victory in Columbia last season.

The Tigers are led by 6-4 forward Clay Johnson who is scoring at a 17.9 point per game clip. Larry Drew, a 6-1 guard, is averaging 13.8 and 6-7 forward, Brad Droy, 13.4.

The Tigers will also have the services of 6-9 center Stan Ray who pumped in 19 points against Nebraska in his first start since being sidelined with an early season hand injury.

Despite low scoring performances against Oklahoma State and Kansas in his last two Big Eight outings, Curtis Redding still leads the 'Cats in scoring with a 21.6 point per game average. Mike Evans follows closely, averaging 19.9.

Evans enters tonight's game needing only 44 points to crack the all-time Big Eight scoring record of 1,940 set by Cliff Meely of Colorado.

Out on a fling

Gordon Plank, president and founder of Aerial Wizards, frisbee throwers par excellence, prepares to unleash a routinely gargantuan toss.

Frisbee flingers whirl to nationwide stardom

By JULIE YERGER
Collegian Reporter

From pies in the sky to plastic disks, Frisbee players have spun their way into national prominence.

Originating with the first pie plate being thrown through the air, the Frisbee has evolved into the finely-tuned, precisely-balanced disk of today.

"Frisbees are very complex, they're not just a toy," said Gordon Plank, the president and founder of the Aerial Wizards, a group of local Frisbee players.

"The spin of the Frisbee is the secret," he said. "Increasing the angle and the point it is released from—that's the art of throwing a frisbee."

Plank has taught University For Man classes about frisbees. He is a contender in the regional Associated College Union International (ACU-I) competition, which will be held in West Stadium next weekend.

"The ACU-I is an organization of college unions that support indoor sports," Plank said.

STATES included in the regional competition are Nebraska, Colorado, Missouri and Kansas. Foosball, bowling, air hockey, table tennis, billiards and Frisbee playing are some of the sports included in the competition.

"Last year was the first year of Frisbee playing in college competition," he said.

Plank won the K-State tournament last year and placed in the top five in this year's tournament. This makes him eligible for the ACU-I Midwestern Frisbee competition.

"The tournament consists of two events, accuracy and distance. Distance you can practice and know what you have to do," he said. "The accuracy part is just a matter of luck."

Whamm-O, the producer of Frisbees, sponsors local and regional Frisbee competition. "We use the World Class Frisbees in the regionals," Plank said. "The 119-gram is becoming very popular and that's what we use."

THE VARIABLE weights make a difference in throwing a Frisbee. If it's windy, a 10-gram difference can be important in achieving accuracy and distance. The heaviest Frisbee is 165 grams and the lightest is 97 grams.

Plank prefers the Fast Back model, which is a lightweight Frisbee. Sometimes the power is lost with a heavier Frisbee, he said.

"I'm working on the two finger throw right now," he said. "You have to figure out what's wrong, such as the amount of spin, and do it over and over. A lot of people don't have the patience to practice."

Plank has been practicing since he first learned how to throw a frisbee about five years ago.

Practicing outdoors gives him an understanding of the air currents which he thinks will give him an advantage in next week's competition.

Marijuana, energy major ASK issues at caucus with state congressmen

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

The decriminalization of marijuana and the promotion of energy-saving techniques on college campuses are among the issues to be lobbied by the Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) at a caucus with state legislators Feb. 26-27 in Topeka.

Paula Jacques, K-State ASK director, said the issues to be lobbied are:

—Reducing the punishment for possession of marijuana to a level similar to a traffic violation.

—Promoting the conservation of energy through energy-saving techniques on college campuses.

—Increasing student employee salaries to federal minimum wage levels. Currently, no university is required to pay the increase in minimum wage.

—A bill encouraging cities to establish escrow accounts for landlord-tenant disputes over repairs so neither the landlord nor the tenant can use rent money until the dispute is settled. This is a substitute for the landlord-tenant self-help bill which requires landlords to make building repairs if problems interfere with the health, safety or welfare of the tenant.

—Simplifying voter registration by mail. The amendment would speed the registration process one step by allowing students to call their home district for registration applications instead of mailing requests.

ASK is a student lobbying organization comprised of the six regent institutions excluding the University of Kansas and including Washburn University.

ASK will also endorse certain issues which currently don't have any chance of passing but shouldn't be ignored because they involve students, Jacques said.

Sen. Donn Everett's proposal to place a five-cent tax on cigarettes and distributing the revenue to the six state universities to be used for recreation will be endorsed by ASK, Jacques said.

ASK will oppose Senate bill No. 573 limiting building and remodeling projects of costs over $500,000 on state universities, which would be effective July 1978 to July 1980.

Jacques said lobbying by ASK involves talking with the legislators, forming coalitions with other interested groups and testifying before committees.

"We do whatever we can to build support for the bill to help get it through," she said.

Jacques said any interested students are eligible to participate in the lobbying sessions. Lobbying workshops to study the issues will be held to help prepare students, she said.

"We want to be well informed so we may be taking a smaller group, but there is no limit," Jacques said.

Greater heart attack risk shows The Pill, cigarettes do not mix

WASHINGTON (AP)—Food and Drug Commissioner Donald Kennedy said Tuesday the nation's 3 to 4 million women who smoke cigarettes and take birth control pills should quit smoking or find another method of contraception.

The message is simple, Kennedy said: "If you take the pill, don't smoke. If you do smoke while on the pill you increase dramatically your chances of suffering a heart attack or stroke." He added: "If you must smoke, find another method of contraception."

Kennedy said women who both smoke and use the pill are 10 times more likely to die of a heart attack or other circulatory disorders than women who neither smoke nor take the pill.

Kennedy, a biologist, gave the advice in announcing his agency will require new, updated and more informative brochures for women who purchase the pill after April 3, the day the new regulation takes effect.

THE BROCHURE and shorter leaflet summarizing medical information about the pill in non-medical language will carry a warning that says:

"Cigarette smoking increases the risk of serious adverse effects on the heart and blood vessels from oral contraceptive use. This risk increases with age and with heavy smoking (15 or more cigarettes a day) and is quite marked in women over 35 years of age. Women who use oral contraceptives should not smoke."

The warning will be the most prominent ever displayed on leaflets that pharmacists have been required to distribute with oral contraceptives since 1970.

The information the FDA currently requires manufacturers to distribute with pill packets that say women have an increased risk of circulatory problems, including potentially fatal blood clotting or strokes. But it says most side effects from the pill are not serious.

That information still will be included, along with new advice telling women not to use oral contraceptives if they have had blood clotting disorders, cancer of the breast or sex organs, unexplained vaginal bleeding, a stroke, heart attack or angina pectoris or if they suspect they may be pregnant.

WOMEN also are strongly advised not to take birth control pills if they have scanty or irregular menstrual periods.

Two women have filed suit in federal district court in Brooklyn, N.Y., trying to force FDA to include a warning in the patient labeling that the pill causes breast cancer.

Speedy governor ignores violation

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP)—Gov. Milton Shapp's white Lincoln was clocked doing a blue streak on the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

Shapp said Tuesday that a state trooper made a mistake in failing to give his driver, state police trooper Anthony Diguglielmo, a speeding ticket and that he made a mistake in not telling him to do so.

"I feel embarrassed about the whole thing," Shapp said after his car was clocked at 74 miles per hour by a radar unit Monday and later at 90 mph by a pursuing car. The turnpike speed limit is 55.

"The trooper looked in the back and saw me. And I guess he was remiss in not giving me a ticket," said Shapp, who added he was unaware that his car was traveling faster than the limit.

Shapp was en route from his home in Merion to a news conference.

Franklin named to Board of Regents

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

Former K-State Student Body President Bernard Franklin was appointed to the Kansas Board of Regents Wednesday by Gov. Robert Bennett, the youngest person ever appointed to the board.

Franklin, 24, was appointed to fill one of two vacancies on the board left by former regents Elmer Jackson and John Montgomery. Also appointed to the board was Dr. Robert O'Neil, 58, a Topeka physician and University of Kansas graduate.

Franklin, K-State student body president from 1975-76, said he would be a responsible and productive regent and try not to allow his age to be an issue.

FRANKLIN said he hoped to offer the other regents a recent graduate's perspective on issues that come before the board.

"I just left the campus and I think I can bring them some information," he said.

Franklin said he did not have any immediate issues to bring to the board, but said he was aware of some problems on university campuses in Kansas.

"I think my foremost contribution is to continue to ensure that all state institutions are being represented at this level as best as possible," he said.

The first black student body president at K-State and the first president elected on a write-in campaign, Franklin said he would also bring a black student perspective to the board.

FRANKLIN was also head of Black Student Union and was awarded the Martin Luther King Memorial Award. He is currently a service consultant for management development with American Telephone and Telegraph in Kansas City.

Terry Matlack, student body president, said he was pleased with Franklin's appointment to the board.

"I think the governor made an excellent choice. As a matter of fact, I think Mr. Franklin has an enormous amount of respect from students and educators and state officials," Matlack said. "Bernard's the kind of person the students can identify with."

Matlack said Franklin's appointment is good for the students on campus as well as the reputation of the University.

"What it means to K-State is that we will have a regent that is sensitive to some of our problems on campus because this is where he has had his experience. However, most problems are not just specific to K-State but to all of the regent institutions," Matlack said.

"Anytime we have a K-State graduate that is that successful and held in that high esteem, it speaks well for Kansas State University. So we are bound to reap some public relations benefits," he said.

Bernard Franklin

South Africa apartheid policy leads subcommittee to request trade halt

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Carter administration should forcefully discourage U.S. investment in South Africa because of that country's official policy of racial apartheid, a Senate subcommittee said Wednesday.

"We're saying that if the South African government wants to continue down the road of legalized repression, this country is not going to support it," said Sen. Dick Clark, (D-Iowa), chairman of the Senate foreign relations subcommittee on Africa.

The United States has publicly condemned South Africa's racial policies, and refused to sell arms to the government of Prime Minister John Vorster.

The present policy is to neither encourage nor discourage trade with South Africa.

THERE was no immediate reaction from the White House on the subcommittee's suggestion that the Carter administration apply more stringent economic pressures to show its disapproval of South Africa's racial policies.

The subcommittee studied U.S. corporations that do business in South Africa. In a report issued Wednesday it found an "abysmal performance" by most firms in relation to South Africa's policy of racial separation.

"The net effect of American investment has been to strengthen the economic and military self-sufficiency of South Africa's apartheid regime," the panel said. This, it said, undermined the fundamental goals and objectives of U.S. foreign policy.

In all, there are 260 U.S. companies with interests in South Africa, but fewer than one-third responded in detail to questions about how black employees in that country are hired, trained, paid and promoted.

AMONG the largest U.S. firms with interests there are Mobil Oil, Caltex, Exxon, Standard Oil of California, General Motors, Ford Motor Co., Chrysler, IBM, Control Data Corp. and the National Cash Register Co.

It is estimated that U.S. firms with interests in South Africa employ about 100,000 persons in South Africa, 70 percent of them black, the report said.

"We see only a handful of these American companies that are paying equal pay for equal work," Clark said at a news conference.

While there are some recent indications that the level of U.S. investment has been declining, Clark said, the effect of American dollars loaned or spent in South Africa through 1976 was to prop up that country's ability to purchase weapons and oil on the world market.

Most U.S. firms say they are blocked from introducing equal opportunity policies by South African racial laws, a contention challenged by the subcommittee.

The report said only one U.S. company, Ford Motor Co., has made any moves to recognize black labor unions.

Wife to succeed Humphrey in vacant U.S. Senate seat

FORT LAUDERDALE (AP) — Muriel Humphrey who says she wants to "help complete" some of her late husband Hubert's unfinished legislative business, was appointed Wednesday to his vacant seat in the U.S. Senate by Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich.

Mrs. Humphrey, who will be 66 next month, becomes the only woman in the Senate. She will serve at least until a special election is held next November to fill the remaining four years of her husband's term.

Humphrey, after serving 23 years in the Senate, died of cancer at his lakeside home in Waverly, Minn. on Jan. 13. He was 66. The couple had been married 41 years.

Mrs. Humphrey declined to say whether she would run in the special election. "That's a long time away. I have no idea," she told reporters.

SHE said she had never discussed with her husband the possibility of serving out his term. "I think that Hubert never once said that he was going to do anything but go back to the Senate."

"I had no guidance at all from him in the decision," she said. "I hope that he is guiding me today, along with a good many other people, in this decision, because I felt it was a very, very difficult decision to make and a very responsible one to make. I do not take it lightly, not as a caretaker job."

Sadat, Carter in 'constant contact'

CAIRO (AP)—Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said Wednesday he is in "constant contact" with President Carter and that behind-the-scenes negotiations were under way to reopen peace talks with Israel. But Sadat said he does not know when or if the talks will resume.

Israel, with U.S. help, reportedly has drafted a proposed declaration of principles aimed at restarting political talks in Jerusalem, which had begun to deal with the Palestinian and other issues before Sadat broke them off last week.

Israeli officials said their country was awaiting a response from Cairo on the proposed declaration.

The officials also predicted that the Israeli Cabinet this weekend would decide to renew the parallel military talks in Cairo, which the cabinet last Sunday chose not to reinjoin.

ASSISTANT U.S. Secretary of State Alfred Atherton has been trying to mediate a dispute over wording of the declaration.

Sadat, speaking with reporters after reviewing a display by police academy cadets, said he sent messages Tuesday and Wednesday to President Carter through U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts and had received replies. But he would not disclose the contents.

Sadat said there might be "some news" in a few days but would not elaborate, saying matters were "in a quiet period in which all parties concerned re-evaluate their position."

Senior Egyptian sources said they believe that the political talks, broken off by Egypt last week, could resume within 10 days.

"We are looking for a demonstration of flexibility from Israel," said one Egyptian source.

THE POLITICAL talks were suspended against a background of hardening public positions and Israeli objections to Egyptian press remarks it considered anti-Semitic. Sadat accused Israel of not negotiating in good faith.

The military talks center on withdrawal of Israeli troops from the Sinai Peninsula, which Israel seized from Egypt in the 1967 Mideast War.

Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin said Monday that reopening the talks depends on a halt to what he called an anti-Jewish "campaign of vilification" in the Egyptian press.

Publicly, both sides remain where they were when Egypt called home its negotiators from Jerusalem last week.

Egypt demands total Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands, but Israel wants to maintain settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Sinai.

Radiation search still on

YELLOWKNIFE, Northwest Territories—U.S. and Canadian planes sweeping the skies for radiation from a fallen Soviet satellite widened their search Wednesday to the Lake Superior area of the United States, but no fallout has been detected, officials of the two countries said.

"There is no indication of any radioactivity so far," U.S. State Department spokeswoman Jill Schuker told reporters in Washington.

Maj. Geoff Haswell, Canada's Defense Department spokesman, told a news conference in Ottawa that the aerial sweeps were broadened to include an area between Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, apparently meaning the skies over Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

The crippled Cosmos 954 satellite, powered by a nuclear reactor containing 100 pounds of highly radioactive uranium 235, plummeted from space and reentered the earth's atmosphere early Tuesday.

Mayors slam budget

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Conference of Mayors says the economic philosophy that underlies President Carter's $500.2-billion budget plan is inpatible with efforts to carve out a workable urban strategy.

"You cannot develop a national urban policy while cutting back on the federal government's share of the GNP (Gross National Product). You have to spend more money," Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse said on Wednesday.

Alexander, president of the conference, said the nation's big-city mayors will try to help shape Carter's urban policy, due in mid-March. But he said he was concerned about the president's expressed desire to hold down federal spending as a percentage of the nation's overall economy.

"Mayors all over the country are alarmed," he added. "If the president adheres to this policy, we will not have full employment, we will not have national health insurance."

At-home pregnancy test

NEW YORK—"Am I pregnant or not?" is a question that American women can now answer for themselves in the privacy of their own homes.

A kit distributed by WarnerChilcott—E.P.T. (Early Pregnancy Test)—is said to be capable of detecting pregnancy as early as nine days after a woman has missed an expected menstrual period.

The kit has a test tube, which contains chemicals that should detect a pregnancy hormone in a woman's urine; a dropper; a vial with purified water; and a test tube holder with mirror.

To use the kit, a woman must wait at least nine days after her period was due, then place the purified water and three drops of urine in the tube, shake the test tube for 10 seconds, and let the tube stand in the holder for two hours.

If a brown ring forms in the bottom of the tube, as seen in the mirror, she can be 97 percent sure she is pregnant.

Bad water in Topeka

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Drinking water supplies in several cities of the Midwest, including Topeka, have been found to contain possible cancer-causing chemicals, the regional office of the Environmental Protection Agency says.

The EPA Wednesday proposed regulations aimed at limiting the amount of so-called trihalomethanes or THMs to no more than 100 parts per billion in drinking water. Some THMs such as chloroform have been known to cause cancer in laboratory animals.

Where are Carter's morals?

The Carter Administration has made a truly despicable move.

David Marston was dismissed from his position as U.S. Attorney for Eastern Pennsylvania on Saturday.

Marston had successfully prosecuted leading Democratic politicians for corruption and was investigating at least two Democratic U.S. Congressmen at the time of his dismissal.

Earlier this month at a news conference, President Carter acknowledged that he had told Attorney General Griffin Bell (on Nov. 4) to "expedite" Marston's removal.

The New York Times reports that the President called Bell after getting a call from Rep. Joshua Eilberg (D-Pa.) urging the President to hurry the removal of Marston.

Eilberg was under investigation by Marston at the time.

Eilberg was worried that he may end up like State Senator Henry Cianfrani (D-Pa., investigated by Marston) who pleaded guilty to 106 counts of bribery, fraud and obstruction of justice earlier this month.

But Eilberg is safe now.

Attorney General Bell performed the deed as requested.

BELL DECLINED to meet with reporters after dismissing Marston in a two-hour meeting in Washington D.C.

Telling the truth to a group of reporters can be a very hard thing to face sometimes.

Marston said Bell's explanation for the ouster was "purely political."

"He said we have a system and that he has to accept that system. I don't agree with that. They had a system in Philadelphia, too, before I got there and I didn't accept that system. I threw it out and eliminated politics from the federal prosecutor's office," Marston said.

We hope President Carter will select a good Democratic replacement for Marston.

Surely he can find a fellow who will be less controversial and will be more understanding with naughty congressmen.

And perhaps the President can explain to the American people what happened to his morals that he was so proud of at election time.

Biased coverage of televised sports

Editor,

The following letter is a copy of one I sent to NBC News in New York. I thought your readers might be interested.

Dear Floyd Kalber and The Today Show,

I would appreciate knowing why NBC sports chose to televise fifth-ranked UCLA's (Sun., Jan. 15) basketball game with the Russian National team, a game lost by UCLA, and failed to even mention K-State's win over the same Russian team on Thurs., Jan. 19. The score was not given during the sports segment of The Today Show news, nor was the game mentioned during the evening news.

I realize K-State is neither an east coast team nor are they nationally ranked, but I do feel they deserve some recognition for their fine effort. No excuses need be made for the Russian team in light of their game played on Sunday and again on Tuesday, for K-State played on Saturday and again on Wednesday immediately preceding the encounter.

IF YOU and your staff do not know about the basketball strength in the Big Eight, I suggest you ask NBC sports commentator Al McGuire. K-State nearly eliminated his national champion Marquette team in the NCAA semifinals last year, losing by only one point.

I really have little faith in your biased collegiate sports coverage. Are you a K.U. or Notre Dame graduate?

Retired, but not tired

He was known throughout the small midwestern community as Uncle George. No, he wasn't everyone's uncle. In fact, he wasn't anyone's uncle, he just acted like it and the town loved him for it—until he grew old.

In his prime he was the manager of the local country club. It was said he could have been a good golfer had he given up his old wooden shafted clubs for the new steel ones. Somehow he couldn't.

Uncle George was a religious man, but unlike most people he didn't just talk about his beliefs, he practiced them. "Do unto others" was his way of life.

WHEN THE local lodge members needed a trustworthy manager they called Uncle George. They knew, as did the rest of the town, that all the money from the slot machines would end up in the bank deposit and recorded on the books.

Past managers found it was too easy to just pocket some of the dimes and quarters from the heavily played machines.

The lodge also knew that with Uncle George in charge, there wouldn't be a drunk running the bar. Of course, he had his faults, although I can't think of them. He never had an enemy in the world.

One day Uncle George made a major mistake in his life—he turned 65 years old.

No one thought twice as Uncle George put his new gold watch in his pocket and headed out the door for the last time. Retirement was an accepted practice. Later he wished he had died rather than grown old.

HE SOMEHOW survived the first few years. He managed to keep his sanity and fight off boredom. Some of the time he spent at home watching daytime television of all things. But most of the time he was at a local golf course—his social security check wasn't large enough for a membership at the country club he had worked at for 20 years.

All his life he worked. He worked damn hard for retirement. He had always heard it was a time when a person could live life the way he wanted and do all the things he never had time for when he was younger. No one told him that when he finally reached that age, he would be too poor.

Outside, he kept the impression he was happy. He appeared to be living the good life but deep down he felt useless. He began to spend more time in a tin shed some people called a clubhouse drinking beer.

First it was one or two beers a day but gradually it increased to eight and ten.

UNCLE GEORGE was no longer a useful part of society. He was like a can of Coke. All his worth had been soaked up until he was empty and then he was thrown away to rust in a nearby ditch.

It wasn't just the mandatory retirement that destroyed his life; it was attitude. Since he had grown old, many friends he had seen grow up wouldn't associate with him. Only the older men would play a round of golf with him. Maybe the younger players were afraid he would beat them. And he would have—when he was sober.

Someday society will realize "old people," like the can of Coke, are recyclable.

Their usefulness hasn't been used up, but has matured with age and experience.

Maybe some people like sitting in a rocking chair dreaming about the good old days.

Me? I'm going to lie about my age.

Inflation strikes Aggieville; cover charges on the rise

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Prices are rising everywhere, and Aggieville taverns are no exception.

Terry Ray, owner of Mr. K's, Kite's, and the Rocking K, says inflation is a problem.

"Be aware that the tavern business is no different than any other business," Ray said. "It's a fact that we are living with increasing prices."

"In business, success is measured by profit. If we don't make a profit, we fail."

THE NEW minimum wage, which went into effect the first of the year, is a 15 percent increase from minimum wage last year, he said.

"When minimum wage goes up, it has a balloon effect on all the employees. It's affecting all the salaries," Ray said.

Ray said there will be a raise in the wholesale price of beer within the next four months.

"We are trying to hold the line on beer prices. We decided to raise cover charges 25 cents on Friday and Saturday nights to compensate for rising costs at Mr. K's and Rocking K," he said. "Consumers should realize prices are going up."

RAY SAID there are three things he could cut down on. First, he said he could cut down on service to the customers so they would have to serve themselves.

Second, Ray said he could cut back on utilities, but he didn't think it likely customers would stay in an uncomfortable environment.

Third, Ray said he could cut down investing money in his taverns, but without remodeling and repairing, customers may quit coming in.

"Anything we cut back on will hurt our business," Ray said.

FRED LECHNER, co-owner of Mother's Worry, has to deal with the same problem of rising costs.

"We haven't raised admission on weekends," Lechner said. "It's going to stay the same, which is 75 cents for students."

Lechner said the price of bottled and canned beer has been raised to equal the prices of his competitors. The steins are a nickel higher, but he said per ounce the draft beer costs the same as the competitors.

"We'll try not to raise the price of pitchers this semester," Lechner said. "They are the customers' favorite."

"The last thing I want to do is raise prices, but we have to stay in business," Ray said.

Winter brings driving hazards

For the wintertime motorist, driving presents its own set of problems.

Motorists need to realize that it will take longer to get where they're going, said Robert Chard, Manhattan Public Works maintenance superintendent.

"Everyone expects to get up in the morning at the same time they always do and go to work at 35 miles per hour and get there on time," he said.

Motorists can't drive in the winter like they can in the middle of June, Chard said.

Chard's advice to motorists is to be "extremely careful" and "don't spin your wheels."

Lieutenant Raymond Peplow of the Riley County Police Department said all cars should be equipped with snow tires.

"If you get stuck on a snow route without snow tires you are subject to a ticket," Peplow said.

Main trafficways such as Poyntz, Anderson, Ft. Riley Boulevard and Tuttle Creek Boulevard are posted as snow routes and are cleared of snow first, he said.

Peplow outlined several guidelines for winter driving. They include the following:

—Cars should be in tune and have a good battery, brakes and proper amount of antifreeze in the radiator.

—Cars should be equipped with snow tires or chains (chains are better on ice).

—Start early to allow plenty of time to reach destinations.

—Windshields should be clear.

—Drive with caution, especially on ice.

—When going into a skid, turn wheels in the direction of the skid to get out of it.

Student Senate considers switch to yearly elections

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

A bill establishing the yearly election of Student Senate is among the legislation senate will consider in its first spring semester meeting tonight at 7 o'clock in the Union Big 8 room.

Elections for student senators are held once a semester, but under the proposal elections would be held the fourth full week of classes in spring semester.

If adopted, the bill would go into effect February 1979. Senators elected in Oct. 1977 would remain in office until February 1979. A constitutional revision and by-laws change must be passed by a three-fourths majority of senate and approved by two-thirds of the College Councils.

Terry Matlack, student body president and a sponsor of the bill, said elections every semester place senate in a constant state of reorganization because the make-up of senate changes too often.

"It's just disruptive. You just don't have a solid amount of time to sit down and work," Matlack said.

MATLACK SAID the change should make senate more effective by allowing for more continuity and less disorganization and turnover.

"I hope senate will see the advantages and that they would vote for a betterment of Student Senate," he said.

Senate will also consider a bill requiring all groups going on trips or conferences paid for in whole or in part by senate to submit a written report on activities during the trip for use when senate decides to fund a similar trip again.

Faculty Senate studies plan to lower boom on cheaters

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

A preliminary proposal for procedures and rights of the faculty in prosecuting students believed to be cheating is being considered by Faculty Senate.

"We wanted something for a guideline for faculty to use in a regular classroom situation. This is not something that is going to be a policy, but it is a guideline," said Carole Francq, chairman of Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee.

Besides suggesting procedures for the instructor in confronting the student, the proposal also lists definitions of the different forms of academic dishonesty and suggests punishments.

The present procedure is for a student or faculty member to file a complaint with the Undergraduate Grievance Committee of Faculty Senate, said Herman Donnert, chairman of Undergraduate Grievance Committee.

The proposed procedure would be for the instructor to get in touch with his department head, and have a meeting with the department head and the student.

The suggested punishments in the proposal range from a minimum of a notice in the student's file to a maximum of expulsion. For a second offense, the punishment is automatic suspension for a year to expulsion.

"At the present time there are no stipulations on a maximum and minimum disciplinary action," Donnert said.

The need for such a proposal came up when Terry Parenich, a former K-State instructor, sent a letter stating the need for a more specific outline of academic dishonesty and procedures for prosecuting suspected students.

"The instructors were just uncertain of what their legal rights were," Francq said.

Limit on foreign investment goal of Kansas lawmakers

Foreign investors own 400 million acres of land in the United States and two Kansas legislators are trying to establish control over those investments.

The amount of land in Kansas owned by some of the 395 foreign investors has not yet been determined but according to Wilfred Pine, K-State agricultural economist, at least one Middle East country has tried to buy 30,000 acres of Kansas wheat land.

Rep. Keith Sevelius (R-Norton) is trying to set dates for hearings on the foreign ownership of agricultural land before the House subcommittee on small farms and rural development, according to a member of Sebelius' staff in Washington.

STATE Rep. Denny Burgess (R-Wamego) is sponsoring a bill in the Kansas House that would limit a foreign investor to 160 acres of farmland.

"Some of us feel that we would like to prohibit those purchases (by foreign investors) all together but under the constitution we can't without having a constitutional amendment," Burgess said Saturday in an interview with Ron Wilson of KSAC radio.

"The danger that I see in allowing these purchases, particularly of large tracks of land, is that some foreign country, or whomever gets control of the land, could in turn withhold production and force prices clear out of sight," Burgess said.

Burgess admits that it would limit the flow of outside capital into Kansas but feels that in the long run it would be worth it.

"I think we need to look down the road a ways and see what the long term effect would be. The way I look at it, it would be nothing but detrimental over a long period of time," he said.

Kansans support canal treaty after discussion with Carter

TOPEKA (AP)—Two legislators who were among a dozen influential Kansans invited to the White House Tuesday for a briefing on the proposed Panama Canal treaties said Wednesday the session convinced them the treaty ought to be ratified.

"I had reservations, based really on a lack of knowledge," said Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger, (D-Kansas City). "Now, I think we must go ahead and ratify the agreements."

"I think the people there really satisfied my concerns of whether we were 'giving back' the canal," said House Speaker Pro Tem James Slattery, (D-Topeka). "I'm convinced ratification will have a positive effect on our relations with all of Latin America."

Senate President Ross Doyen, (R-Concordia), and House Speaker John Carlin, (D-Smolton), also were invited but could not attend the White House briefing, which lasted two and a half hours, in-

UFM set to start spring programs

University for Man (UFM), which offers educational programs, will distribute brochures on February 6 for its upcoming classes, UFM Coordinator Sue Maes said.

The brochure is made up of eight sections and explains the available classes, ranging from beginning ballroom dancing to auto mechanics for women, according to UFM staff member Lisa Barnes.

Classes are free except when material costs are necessary, Barnes said. Barnes encourages students to register early because many of the classes close quickly.

Registration will be February 13, 14 and 15. Students can register at the Union, Manhattan library, UFM house or the Douglas Community Center.

Classes will run from Feb. 20 through mid-May and range in length from one to four sessions, Barnes said.

Courses are not offered or university credit but are designed to keep students up on current issues and trends, Barnes explained.

"These classes give people an opportunity to learn things they may not otherwise have the chance to learn," Barnes said.

Wildcats' title hopes dwindle

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

The post-season Big Eight Tournament, a dirty word among K-State faithfuls last season, could become a very popular term on campus in coming weeks.

Any hopes the 'Cats had of repeating as Big Eight conference champs this season all but slipped out the window last night as they sustained their fourth conference defeat at the hands of Missouri, 65-60, in Columbia.

The loss put K-State's record at

Sports

2-4 in the Big Eight and 11-6 overall, while the Tigers moved to 3-3 in conference play and 10-8 overall.

THE 'CATS, trailing at the end of a slow-paced first half, 32-31, found that defense alone doesn't win basketball games. Points do.

Poor shooting and lack of rebounds cost the 'Cats the game as they were out-rebounded, 43-33.

After Rolando Blackman hit first in the second half to put K-State in the lead, 33-32, the 'Cats iced up, hitting only seven of their next 26 shots.

Missouri's Stan Ray pumped in a jumper with 17:50 left in the contest to put the Tigers up, 34-33, and gave them a lead they never relinquished.

The 'Cats mixed a man-to-man and 2-1-2 zone defense all night, but could not shut off the Tigers' inside game completely.

ALTHOUGH they held Ray to only five points, Brad Doy put in 20 and Clay Johnson added 14 to lead the Tigers. Guards Larry Drew and Jeff Currie added 11 and 10 points, respectively.

'Cats coach Jack Hartman, who has been hoping for more balanced scoring out of his team, got it last night, but not enough of it.

Blackman led K-State with 17 points, Steve Soldner added 12 and Mike Evans 10. Curtis Redding had 11 points for the 'Cats, with 10 of those points coming in the first half.

Blackman, who kept K-State within striking distance throughout the game, possibly played his best game in a K-State uniform. Besides equaling his career high point total, Blackman pulled down numerous rebounds and applied aggressive man-to-man defense to Johnson (Missouri's leading scorer), allowing him only four points in the first half.

Next up for the 'Cats will be the Oklahoma Sooners, who were defeated last night by Iowa State, 76-74, in Norman. The Sooners are 3-3 in the Big Eight and 10-8 overall.

Tipoff is slated for 4:05 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn.

K-State erupts and surprises Kansas by hanging on to avenge earlier loss

LAWRENCE—The K-State women's basketball team surprised Kansas in Lawrence last night, with a 66-65 victory. The win brings K-State's season record to 10-11 and avenges an earlier loss to the Jayhawks in the Big Eight Tournament.

Coming off a western road trip in which they lost three games, Coach Judy Akers wasn't sure how her team would play against KU.

"...if we come out flat like we did against UCLA, I'm not sure we could beat anybody around here" Akers said.

But K-State did not come out flat against the 11-5 Jayhawks. They came out flying, as they built a 38-26 halftime lead against the team ranked 20th in the national coaches poll.

The Wildcats continued to play well through the second half, and they stayed out of foul trouble, which helped them.

"Obviously we played well," Akers said. "It was anybody's ballgame. The big difference was that they were in foul trouble and we weren't."

LAURIE MILLER led K-State with 19 points and 10 rebounds, but didn't play the final four minutes because she injured her left knee.

The 'Cats balanced their attack with 10 points from freshmen guard Gayla Williams, 10 points and eight rebounds from Eileen Feeney, and nine points and eight rebounds from center Beth Boggs.

Although she didn't start, senior guard Kristi Short also played well.

"I take Krist out and she came back like a champion," Akers said. Short and Sara Hackerott scored four points apiece. Michelle Campbell added two points.

Kansas was led by 6-0 freshmen standout Lynette Woodard who scored 22 points and grabbed 14 rebounds. Like K-State's Miller, Woodard also was on the bench in the final minute because she fouled out with 54 seconds to play.

Namath calls it quits; ends legendary career

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP)—Joe Willie Namath, whose frolicking lifestyle was a standard for some and whose quarterbacking talent was a standard for others, has retired from professional football.

Namath, 34, confirmed his retirement from the National Football League at an airport mob scene of reporters and broadcasters Wednesday, following a disappointing farewell season with the Los Angeles Rams.

"This is official. I told Dave Anderson (New York Times columnist) last night," Namath said to a horde of media people. "Football's been great to me, but it's time to move on."

Pressed for further comment by the mob of reporters, Namath appeared exasperated and said: "Why can't we just leave it like that? I'm finished. I quit."

NAMATH flew here for a celebrity golf tournament. American Airlines, sponsors of the tournament, had said Namath would hold a news conference Wednesday, but, before his arrival, the airline announced the conference would be postponed one day.

As he was rushing through the terminal, Namath was asked when he would comment at length about

Jayhawks edged by Cornhuskers

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska's defense came through Wednesday night stopping Kansas, the Big Eight's top point producer, in Lincoln. When the final buzzer sounded, Nebraska was on top, 62-58.

The high-flying Jayhawks had been pointing to the Cornhusker game ever since their victory Saturday over Kansas State, but the Huskers handed them their first Big Eight loss, dropping their record to 15-3 overall.

Home-ec gives dual degree to private college students

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

A cooperative dual-degree program approved late last semester by the Kansas Board of Regents will give students at independent Kansas colleges a chance to earn a home economics degree from Kansas State along with a baccalaureate degree from their independent colleges.

According to Evelyn Senecal, associate dean of the College of Home Economics, the dual-degree program allows students to study five semesters at an affiliated college, followed by two semesters of home economics courses at K-State. The remaining semester is spent at the independent college.

"Our first person (to use the program) is a student at McPherson College who is majoring in fashion design," Senecal said. "We are in the process of setting up a program for her."

THE dual-degree program can be completed in four years. Students earn both a Bachelor of Science degree in Home Economics from K-State and an appropriate baccalaureate degree from the student's independent college, Senecal said.

"Some people choose to go to independent colleges for certain reasons such as church affiliation, their parents' alma mater, scholarships or because of friends," she said, "but there is not the diversity of curricula offered at a smaller college so the advantage is they can come to K-State later to get more."

Senecal said there are 16 independent colleges expressing interest in the dual-degree program.

"We are getting calls from Kansas Wesleyan wanting information," she said. "We are in the process of printing brochures to distribute."

The purpose of the dual-degree program is to make an education in home economics accessible to more students.

"It's a way of combining two majors," Senecal said. "Many students from independent colleges are interested in missionary work. There are home economists needed all around the world, especially in the Third World."

Senecal said the program focuses on serving the students in Kansas.

"We are also increasing communications between institutions—serving students as well as faculty."

Prostitution laws bring unconstitutional ruling

NEW YORK (AP)—A judge who ruled that sex for a fee is "recreational" and not a crime came under sharp attack Wednesday after she dropped prostitution charges against a 14-year-old girl. The city said it would appeal the case.

The Rev. Bruce Ritter, who runs a Times Square youth shelter for runaways, termed the decision "immoral, outrageous and unbelievable." He called for the judge's removal from the bench.

Mayor Edward Koch declined to endorse the call for removal, but Koch declared, "The state cannot look aside when a minor—in this case a 14-year-old girl—decides she is going to sell her body."

The city government's corporation counsel, Alan Schwartz, said, "We are appealing the judge's decision. We feel that we have a responsibility to look to the interest of the children who are the parties in Family Court."

IT WAS a decision by Margaret Taylor, acting Family Court judge, that created the uproar. In a lengthy opinion, she held that the adult prostitution laws were unconstitutional.

As a consequence, she dismissed a prostitution charge against the unidentified 14-year-old on the ground that her act would not be a crime if committed by an adult and therefore under state law was not an act of juvenile delinquency.

"My mind is just stunned by the ridiculousness of that decision," said Ritter. "Don't children have the right to be protected from their own ignorance and immaturity? My God, that's why those laws exist."

He said that in the nine months his Covenant House shelter has been open on Eighth Avenue, "We've had over 3,000 kids walk into it. Between 60 and 70 percent of these kids have been into prostitution."

"Hundreds of them have been abused, beaten, tortured and raped by pimps. A lot of them sell themselves because they're hungry," he said. "At what age would this judge draw the line?"

In her decision, Judge Taylor held, "Sex for a fee is recreational ... the arguments that prostitution harms the public health, safety or welfare do not withstand constitutional scrutiny."

She also noted that of 3,219 persons arrested in prostitution cases in the first six months last year, only 62 were persons who patronized prostitutes.

She wrote that police "harbor the attitude that women who supply sex are immoral, whereas the men who demand their services are considered blameless."

COMMAND AT SEA... ...Challenge with ADVENTURE

Many employers can offer a college senior a good job but, few can offer the opportunity to learn the art of seamanship as well as the opportunity to command a ship at sea.

The sea as an environment is a natural adversary to man and his machines an experienced Naval officer knows he cannot beat the sea but merely meet it on its own terms—and in the meeting of its many challenges he earns a measure of satisfaction and kindsmanship shared only with other seafarers.

For more information or an on campus appointment see Lt. Charles McDaniel, Wed.-Fri., Jan. 25-27. Stop by the Student Union, The Placement Office or call collect, (816)-374-3433, or write:

French officials wage war against crime, Empain's elusive kidnapper

PARIS (AP)—French authorities, stymied by a daring kidnap and an elusive bandit leader, were seeking ways Wednesday to confront a general rise of crime and terrorism.

Justice Minister Alain Peyrefitte, who is acting premier while Raymond Barre is abroad, appealed to his countrymen to help police in the war against outlaws.

"Informing on criminals is part of French law," he said. "A criminal who is not denounced is a criminal still on the loose."

"We do not wish a reign of anarchy and violence to establish itself in France," Peyrefitte had warned Tuesday night on nationwide television. "Any weakness or complacency is unacceptable."

POLICE stopped 140,000 vehicles and spot-checked 250,000 Frenchmen in the first 24 hours after mysterious abductors carried off Baron Edouard-Jean Empain in Paris on Monday. The Belgian industrialist heads a giant conglomerate that, among other things, builds nuclear power plants and manufactures arms.

Authorities revealed no new developments in the Empain case, and they were still not certain whether the wealthy nobleman was seized for political or criminal reasons.

They also were still looking for Yves Maupetit, 29, identified by police as leader of a "Bonnie-and-Clyde" bandit team suspected of killing a Paris businessman and his wife last week.

MAUPETIT'S 47-year-old girlfriend was captured in an auto chase that left three policemen injured, and the fugitive later kidnapped a woman in an apparent attempt to ransom his partner. He released her when again forced to flee the massive police dragnet.

Apart from a series of dramatic incidents, police acknowledge there has been a steady rise in murders, robberies and other crimes in France, particularly in Paris.

Potential cancer risk causes EPA to look at water purity

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Environmental Protection Agency proposed new regulations Wednesday that are designed to remove cancer-causing chemicals from the nation's drinking water by requiring unprecedented levels of water purity.

"We're not suggesting this is a panic situation," EPA Administrator Douglas Costle said in announcing the proposed regulations.

However, he warned that EPA has become "especially concerned about the potential increase in cancer risk" resulting from growing amounts of organic chemicals being found in drinking water.

THE proposed regulations would require many municipalities to use activated charcoal filters to purify their water, a move designed to remove synthetic organic chemicals from the water. Most cities now filter their water through sand.

In addition, EPA seeks to limit the amount of so-called trihalomethanes or THMs to no more than 100 parts per billion. Some THMs such as chloroform have been known to cause cancer in laboratory animals.

Laetrile opponents, proponents battle in Topeka

BY JASON SCHAFF
Staff Writer

TOPEKA—Calling it "potentially fatal" as well as "an answer to prayers," proponents and opponents of a bill which would legalize the use of Laetrile in Kansas squared off Thursday in a hearing before the joint legislative committee of Public Health and Welfare.

The bill, introduced by Sen. Wesley Sowers (R-Wichita), was criticized by individuals both in favor and opposed to the use of the drug. However, most of the persons who testified opposed or supported the bill because of their opinions of the worthiness of Laetrile.

Proponents of the legalization of Laetrile, which is currently legal in 14 states, testified as to their personal medical experiences with the substance. Laetrile is used in cancer treatments but is not approved by the Federal Drug Administration because of possible harmful side effects. The opponents of its use were medical and governmental authorities.

The bill would make the manufacture and use of Laetrile legal in the state, if a qualified physician administered its use.

ARMED with a petition which he said contained 10,000 signatures of Kansans for the use of Laetrile, Glen Rutherford, Conway Springs, told those in the packed hearing room that he has been a victim of controlled cancer since 1972 and has used Laetrile.

Rutherford said he realized Laetrile by itself is not a cure for cancer; however, it can help relieve pain caused by the disease.

"If there's nothing else, Laetrile can at least let a person die with dignity and keep him relatively free from pain," Rutherford said.

Other supporters of legalization said that the substance either relieved pain or arrested their physical deterioration from cancer.

Mary Myers, Derby, said Laetrile was "the answer to her prayers" as it stopped the pain her mother was experiencing before she died of cancer.

CHARLENE PITCOCK, Salina, said she found she had a rare cancer in 1967. Pitcock said her first treatment for the disease was the use of cobalt which she said was given to her 18 times. This, she said, only increased the existence of tumors in her body.

Pitcock said she then heard of Laetrile which she credits for her success against cancer. She said she now works full time in addition to taking care of two daughters who she said were born after she found out she had cancer.

"I knew nothing about it (Laetrile), only that it was a hope. Now that it has been brought in front of the public, it's not a hope, it's a fact," Pitcock said.

Maxine Carson, Hamilton, said she attributes her good luck against fighting the disease to Laetrile, for she said she has never had any other cancer treatment. Carson said she discovered in 1974 that she had cancer in most of her internal organs.

Dr. Daniel Burwell, an Overland Park chiropractor, however, said he believed in the use of Laetrile but was opposed to the bill which he said would regulate the substance so it would probably not be able to be used.

Miller pushes for tough obscenity bill

By NANCY HORST
Staff Writer

TOPEKA—Proponents of a bill which would strengthen statutes prohibiting the sale of obscene material to minors hit some stumbling blocks in the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings Thursday.

The committee heard testimony on the bill which defines promoting obscenity to minors and makes it a class A misdemeanor with a mandatory fine of not less than $2,500 and not more than $5,000. Second offenders would draw the fine and up to two years in prison.

Vern Miller, Wichita district attorney, testified in support of the bill saying it is almost impossible to prosecute under the current law prohibiting sale of obscene material to minors.

After distributing several copies of what he termed obscene magazines, such as Playboy, Playgirl, Hustler and Oui, to the committee, Miller based his support for the bill on parental concerns.

"I THINK a great majority of parents are concerned and are in favor of this bill and will support stiffer laws in this area," Miller said.

Although most committee members agreed the magazines were "filthy," they were concerned that the bill would effect libraries, museums and other cultural areas.

Sen. Donn Everett (R-Manhattan), committee member, showed little support for the bill and was concerned that the broad language of it could become a censure of educational facilities and books.

Following the hearing, Everett said that his concern was "an over-zealous district attorney" going too far by getting into the areas of libraries.

"When you go on to a university campus and try to censure thought, you're into a serious area," Everett said.

The bill refers to the definition of obscenity given by the U.S. Supreme Court in Ginsberg vs. N.Y. in 1968 which says applying contemporary community standards, a work taken as a whole is obscene if it appeals to the prurient interest of minors. The bill puts the emphasis on minors because

Senate bill gains approval to extend campaign time

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

A bill allowing student government campaign materials to be posted ten days prior to elections was passed during the first spring semester meeting of Student Senate last night.

In an attempt to allow student government candidates more time to campaign and to encourage voter turnout, senate passed the bill extending campaign poster display from seven to ten days.

Senate voted down a bill allocating $226 for registration and traveling expenses for two K-State representatives to attend an energy conference at Texas A. & M. University in February.

A bill was past requiring all senate-funded groups, excluding line items and college councils, to submit a written summary of trips of conferences in which expenses were paid by Student Governing Association. The summaries would be filed with Senate Finance Committee and used as a basis for future funding of trips or conferences.

Senate passed a resolution supporting Gov. Robert Bennett's appointment of K-State graduate Bernard Franklin to the Kansas Board of Regents, after having passed a resolution last semester encouraging Bennett to appoint a recent graduate to the board.

A bill establishing yearly elections of senators was tabled by senate until next week. If approved, the bill would revise the constitution and elections would be held the fourth full week of spring semester. Currently, senate elections are held every semester.

In other action, senate approved a bill establishing spending policies for the College Councils. Under the policies, no money may be spent on gifts, telephone equipment or social functions.

HAPPY NIGHTS ARE HERE AGAIN . . . One of more than 400 farmers celebrates the news that their efforts had succeeded in halting a land auction in Salina Thursday night.

Farmers use harassment to plow under land auction

By KIM MONTGOMERY
Asst. Editorial Editor

SALINA—A crowd of more than 400 farmers was successful in its bid to stop a cash-rental auction of farmland at the main ballroom of the Hilton Inn here Thursday night.

Only one of the nine land tracts to be sold—a 138-acre tract—was successfully peddled before the harassing tactics of the farmers forced the termination of the auction shortly after 9 p.m. The sale was being conducted by Riordan Auctioneers and Realty of Solomon. Total acreage of the nine tracts to be sold was 1,178.

"As far as I know, this is the first time that they have tried to auction off land in Kansas on a cash-rental basis," said Jim Duggan, a Niles, Kan. farmer and spokesman for the farm protesters.

"If this sale is a success it will start something that we can't stop," Duggan said before the auction.

UNDER THE terms of the cash-rental auction, the tenant must pay 50 percent of the rent in advance of each farm year and the land is open for new bids each year, he said.

"It's 50 percent down, and we take all the risks. It's a guaranteed income plan for the landowner," Duggan said.

Obscenity sales to children draw fire from Vern Miller

"what's obscene for minors may not be obscene for adults," Miller said.

MILLER SAID the decision in the 1968 case gave state legislators the right to make control of obscenity broader for minors.

Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita) questioned the effectiveness of the bill after seeing how merchants violated the law prohibiting sale of cigarettes to minors.

"I've never yet received a complaint in that area," Miller said. "I'm sure they (the offenses) must occur but we hear more about this kind of things than we do cigarettes."

Other committee members questioned if such magazines as National Geographic and Time, which had an article about orgies in New York City, would be affected by the wording in the bill. Miller had trouble justifying his view that they would not be affected.

"These books depict nudes and that's where we're getting our complaints," he said.

Miller admitted the bill was not perfect but it was necessary.

"You're going to be hard-pressed to pass a perfect law in this area...you've got to use common sense," he said.

RON BALLARD, information director of the Concerned Citizens for Community Standards, said that the display and sale of obscene materials to minors was "an invasion of the parental right of teaching."

"The prevention of promoting obscenity to minors is a parental responsibility and right that the state should support," Ballard said.

Allan Hazlett, representing the Kansas Association of Magazine Wholesalers, said the bill was overboard and would be considered unconstitutional on that basis.

"It's unwise, unworkable and we believe unconstitutional to deal with it in this way," Hazlett said.

Hazlett said the association is acting more and more as a censure in its review of magazines, which he said does result in rejection of some magazines sometimes.

Magazine wholesalers don't want to be censors for the rest of society," he said.

The way the bill is written, it puts retailers in the position of setting up "adult only" sections which could easily be said to be pandering, Hazlett said.

Farmers limit land auction with harassing, crowding

The farmers were orderly, although there were numerous outbursts of clapping and coughing in attempts to drown out the auctioneer's voice.

In the middle of the bidding for the first tract, one farmer stood up and said to the auctioneer: "Do you really think that what is happening here tonight is fair? Deep in your heart, do you?"

Thunderous applause, cheers, clapping and whoops from the farmers followed the statement.

One of the current tenants on the land being auctioned said it would be financially impossible for him to commit the rent money in advance as would be required under the cash-rent system instead of operating on a crop-share basis with the landlord.

ANOTHER farmer expressed fear that the independent, family-owned farms will be financially strained even more by this system and that the large cooperative farm operations would "move in."

Several people assisted Dennis Riordan, auctioneer, including his younger brother Mike, as he attempted to conduct the sale over the obvious objections from the farmers.

"He's just doing his job, trying to get the best price for the land," Mike Riordan said.

At 7:40 p.m., after the auction had been delayed 40 minutes, the fire marshal declared there were too many people in the main ballroom, and a sliding wall partition had to be opened to expand the seating and standing room to accommodate the large crowd of farmers who had jammed the hall to stop the auction.

Paxson announces state office bid

DODGE CITY (AP) — Betty Paxson, who has been involved in Democratic fund raising activities, announced Thursday that she would seek her party's nomination for Kansas secretary of state.

Mrs. Paxson, 36, of Topeka, made the announcement at a Dodge City news conference.

Mrs. Paxson, who has not sought elective office previously, worked in three of former Rep. Bill Roy's congressional campaigns and was state finance director for President Carter's 1976 campaign.

Plans approach completion for classroom and office building

Construction plans for a new general classroom and office building on the K-State campus are nearing completion.

An architect is making final plans for a building which will be located at the present site of the rose garden, according to Paul Young, vice president of facilities.

"A couple of weeks ago the plans were 90 percent complete. The contract for construction will be signed in April," Young said.

"The building should take about two years to complete," he said. Construction of the building will begin in May, he said.

"The general classroom and office building will be slightly smaller than Ackert and have five floors," he said.

Moving into the building will be the College of Education and the Department of Psychology, Young said. The building will also house some art classes.

The rose garden will be moved this spring to the Conservatory site on Denison Avenue, Young said.

Radiation discovered

EDMONTON, Alberta—Defense Minister Barney Danson said Thursday that debris from a Soviet satellite that fell from orbit probably is on the ground in the Northwest Territories emitting "extremely dangerous" levels of radiation.

Canadian and American nuclear emergency specialists headed toward a remote trading post in Canada's far north where airborne scanners found unusually high radioactivity.

Danson said in Ottawa there was a "90-percent chance" the radiation came from the disintegrated nuclear-powered Cosmos 954 orbiter, which carried 100 pounds of enriched uranium 235.

He said debris from the satellite has been tentatively pinpointed in the Northwest Territories, about 200 miles west of Baker Lake, an outpost of 1,000 people in frozen tundra country 1,100 miles north of the U.S. border in Minnesota.

Couple stranded on ice

CHICAGO—Screams from a man and his wife stranded on an ice floe off Lake Michigan's shore were heard on the 19th floor of a high rise, and the couple was rescued with the help of policemen forming a chain with their leather belts.

Gregory Mastalerz and his wife of six months, Beverly, both 31, told rescuers they went for a "romantic stroll in the snow" Wednesday night along the shore in the Gold Coast area.

Mastalerz fell into the water and climbed onto floating ice. Police said his wife fell in trying to reach him. As the screaming couple clung to the chunk of ice it began breaking apart and drifting.

Bernie Collieran, who lives on the 19th floor of a building overlooking the lake, said "I heard someone repeatedly screaming for help through several hundred yards of blizzard."

Mayor's wife killed

DAVIS, W.Va.—"He's got a gun on me," the 63-year old wife of the mayor told a reporter over the telephone as she was abducted from her home by a man demanding freedom for a former cellmate. Less than 12 hours later she was found shot to death.

Police said Thursday that Ida Mae Cooper, a member of the town council and wife of Mayor Martin "Red" Cooper, was killed by two blasts from a shotgun. Her body was found early Thursday in a swampy area about 12 miles south of this mountain town.

On Wednesday night, authorities arrested David Bruce Mills, 19, when he hit a snowbank in Mrs. Cooper's car during a chase by police. Authorities said Mills would be charged with murder and kidnapping in the case.

Israel resumes talks

JERUSALEM—Israel opened the door Thursday for the resumption of Israeli-Egyptian military negotiations next week and Egypt launched a diplomatic offensive seeking world support for its Mideast stand.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat told visiting officials Israel's refusal to "recognize the Palestinians' right to self-determination" is the major roadblock to peace.

Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, acting as go-between, said in Israel that he has made "good progress" with the Israelis on drawing up a draft declaration of principles and will fly to Cairo next week.

The official Middle East news agency quoted Sadat as saying he is in "constant contact with U.S. President Carter who fully understands the dimensions of the situation and the role the United States should play in order to define the next step in the peace process."

Proponents cite good, opponents bad in an ugly situation with Laetrile use

MOST supporters said they received their Laetrile treatments in Mexico, because of its illegality in the United States.

Opponents of the legalization of the substance were fewer in number, but said it was necessary the legislature not pass a bill which would be harmful to the people of the state.

Peter Rheinstein of the Federal

Food and Drug Administration said Laetrile was the "major medical fraud of the 20th century."

He said Thursday's hearing was similar to one held 200 years ago in which people claimed they became cured of various ailments by leeches.

David Street, Wichita, and president of the Kansas division of the American Cancer Society, said the substance was potentially fatal because by its use people would not be taking the benefits of the proven cobalt and chemotherapy treatments for cancer.

Several of the bill's opponents said its supporters probably never had cancer in the first place or have been led to believe by coincidences that Laetrile was a successful treatment.

War in space

The American space program is, indeed, one of mankind's greatest endeavors.

We succeeded in outshining the Russian feat of having the first satellite, Sputnik, in orbit.

Russian space technology has been in frantic, full-speed development ever since our moon landing and now is blossoming with new first-ever space feats.

The Russian Salyut-6 space station (which has been in orbit since September) made history on Jan. 11 with the successful docking of two manned Soyuz crafts, and again on Jan. 23 with the docking of an un-manned supply capsule.

THE RUSSIANS are breaking new ground in the concept of manned orbiting space stations.

They are to be commended.

But Russian space efforts are not limited to projects of such benevolent nature.

They have also developed, tested and successfully launched a new breed of satellite referred to by U.S. experts as the "satellite killer."

The concept is simple: this craft is designed to locate, track and destroy other satellites in earth orbit.

A LARGE part of U.S. military and domestic communications is now routed through satellites, so there is some concern as to just what the Russians have in mind.

Not to worry.

The U.S. is developing its own, "new and better" version of the satellite killer.

Whereby the Russian version will simply maneuver in close to a satellite and blow up, the American model will be equipped with laser weaponry to do the killing, and, therefore, will be more efficient since it can roam about blasting more than one target.

BUT WHAT about the glowing speeches of peace and serenity that have been made by leaders of both Russia and the U.S. concerning the development of space technology? International agreements have been made to ban the use of space for any kind of warfare.

But agreements can be broken, and they are.

The taboos on space warfare are falling—as silently as the Soviet spy satellite that fell from orbit and disintegrated on Tuesday.

If the U.S. wants to be a leader in space technology, President Carter should be the first to ask for a halt in the development of the satellite killer.

Not easy dance for beginners

The student population of this University is said to be around 18,000, and one would assume these 18,000 are generally mature adults seeking higher education with certain amounts of intelligence and cultural awareness.

For the sake of my K-State pride and my K.U. revulsion, I was absolutely convinced of that fact.

I even told myself that besides cows, antiseptic architecture and veterinary medicine, K-State students were finally beginning to understand and appreciate the aesthetic genres—the art of paintings, theater, music and in cinema.

Many events of the last three years, however, have clouded that dream and another cloud has made its mark.

LAST TUESDAY, the Union Program Council presented Bertolucci's "Last Tango in Paris" as part of its Kaleidoscope film series.

Rated "X" and rumored to be a genuine porno flick, many students flocked to the Union theaters with visions of naked skin, sordid sex and not much else writhing through their little heads.

Along with these cheap thrill seekers, however, were students who attended to find meanings, see Bertolucci's work or see the work of one of the finest actors in this country, Marlon Brando.

The people who came expecting to find something foolish and shallow found it—in themselves. Some members of this group made their ignorance known by shouting obscenities, rude remarks and other unnecessary commentary throughout the 7:30 showing of the film.

GRANTED, "Last Tango" does contain strong sexual scenes, female nudity and violence. These elements are part of the film's structure, significant in its making a statement about violence and human nature.

For the students who came to absorb meanings behind the action and the film's aesthetic elements, their entertainment was limited by cheap comments, a couple bickering with a UPC member because they couldn't find seats and people who just didn't understand the film.

Some things just can't be explained A-B-C; it's like a eating Polynesian cuisine with your eyes covered and a clothespin on your nose.

HAVING SEEN "Last Tango" once before, I knew Jeanne's closing dialogue and its significance. First-timers had to guess what the English subtitles were saying because as heads bobbed up and down, the houselights flicked on and the cinematic dance was cut.

Well, it was once said there must be followers and leaders in this world. And cheap thrill seekers. And (thankfully) people who employ the process of thought and possess an appreciation of what it can create.

Letters to the editor

Ford fan fumes; column filled with cracks

Editor,

I miss Gerry; hell, I even miss Dick!

My apologies to Ike and Harry. If I don't mention their names, I'm afraid Nancy Horst, like ex-President Ford, "won't understand."

Being myself a tall person with a physical inconvenience when confronted with low doorways and cracks in the sidewalk, I find deplorable the plethora of "in-uendo" about Ford which confronts me during my media contacts ("You remember Ford, don't you?", Jan. 24 Collegian).

I'll not offend the principles guiding this letter by responding to the crack concerning Ford getting paid for letting Nixon "off the hook."

IN ORDER to dismiss all doubt about my political affiliation, I am a Republican and I voted for Nixon and for Ford. I have no delusions about Nixon or about what he did. But neither can I delude myself into seeing much of redeeming value in the carnival known as the Carter administration.

Cracks seem to be the one thing clearly visible in Nancy's nebulous haze of ambiguity. If I read her correctly, not only will the University be filling in cracks in the sidewalk before Ford's visit, but Secret Service men will crawl out of them thereafter as well. No doubt this will result from cheap materials or poor workmanship. I demand a Student Senate investigation.

Trepidation forces me to desist at this point but I would counsel Nancy that it is better to remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak up and remove all doubt.

'Tango' crowd obnoxious

Editor,

A round of one-handed applause goes to the obnoxious crowd who watched Kaleidoscope's showing of "Last Tango in Paris" Tuesday night expecting explicit sex scenes and a shallow plot. To their dismay, the audience had to suffer and use their intelligence (what little they had) to read the English translations on the screen.

The crowd cannot take all the credit. The sound system was anything but adequate and the projectionist did his part by turning on the houselights before the film had ended. I guess a dollar is a fair price to pay for only hearing and seeing half of a movie.

Students question privacy of student records

Editor

Either the privacy act is a joke or it is being violated by the administration at K-State.

We have recently discovered that the ROTC department (and, undoubtedly, all the others) receives a print-out each semester of the current GPA of every student at K-State.

Our complaint is not with any particular department—it is with the practice of giving out such information.

We do not feel that the Army or anyone else not directly involved in a student's academic career has a right to such information.

Farmers' strike may affect more than price of wheat

By DALE KELLISON
Staff Writer

Most K-State economists agree that American consumers may pay higher food prices if farmers receive 100 percent parity.

"We spend 16 to 17 percent of our income for food. This is the lowest of any country," said Roy Bogle, associate professor of agricultural economics. "Others spend 20, 30—as much as 60 percent on food; Americans have a bargain."

Farmers are calling for 100 percent parity and attempting to get it by striking.

IF GRAIN prices rise, it is likely to have a rippling effect, Bogle said.

"Prices of products don't usually rise by themselves. One item can cause the price of many things to rise," said Roy Frederick, associate professor of agriculture economics. "It's pretty difficult to tell what would happen to the price of bread if wheat went up."

"I can't guarantee if the price of wheat went up, that transportation and other items wouldn't go up in price also," Frederick said.

"If they (farmers) get parity for all feed grains, then the cost of feed for livestock producers would increase. If feed increases it will cost more to produce milk, meat and eggs," Bogle said.

Bogle and Frederick said the farm strike has had few results. But they agree it has been successful in educating consumers about the farmers' plight.

However, Bogle said he thought many farmers don't understand parity.

"It's very difficult to understand. I believe farmers really do not want parity," he said.

"Parity is not a realistic concept...because it does not include inflation, efficiency of the American farmer and new technology," Bogle said.

IF A "parity" price were set by the government, buyers would be faced with the problem of deciding which farmers' products to buy. Buyers would buy the best, and

Dole at K-State for health hearing

Senator Robert Dole will be at K-State Saturday attending Senate subcommittee hearings on the delivery of rural health care.

The public hearings will be from 10:30 a.m. to 12:20 p.m. in the Big 8 Room of the K-State Union. The subcommittee will hear testimony from state health officials, physicians and officials from the University of Kansas Medical Center.

once their demand was met, farmers with surplus produce wouldn't be able to sell the surplus for a lower price. Therefore, many farmers would have to wait until the demand for their produce went up, Bogle said.

To keep farmers in business the government would have to set controls, he said.

Most farmers don't want a great amount of government control, but parity can't be obtained without government controls, he said.

"There need to be controls. If parity is achieved it's likely agriculture is going to have more controls than any other time in history," Bogle said.

"Farmers will have to get help from the government to be successful," Frederick said. "It's going to be hard for farmers to do it on an individual basis."

Both Frederick and Bogle said farmers could get better prices for crops without receiving parity.

"It's awful hard to devise a system better than a free and open market," Bogle said. "Farmers need to look at alternatives."

BOGLE SAID farmers need to follow the supply and demand system more closely.

"If the price falls below what it costs to produce, farmers need to cut back, and look at alternative crops which have a greater return," Bogle said.

Frederick said supply control is the help farmers are looking for.

Supply control limits the amount of farm products a farmer can sell at a set price.

Some people have claimed if farmers fail, the economy will be comparable to the depression of the '30s.

"The supposition is we have the same thing happening now as in the '30s," Frederick said. "I think there are a couple of things you have to look at."

"Farmers make up a smaller portion of the population now, so if you have 25 percent of the farmers go broke now you wouldn't have the same effect as in the '30s," he said. "We also have somewhat better programs to handle disasters."

Frederick said the Farm Credit System (FCS) provides money beyond the amount banks loan, and the Farm Home Administration (FHA) provides low interest loans. Both are programs designed to help farmers.

'String Fling': kids do their own thing

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

To some young and aspiring virtuosos, the "String Fling" weekend was an exercise in performance that gave them the chance to meet others and have fun.

A group of about 400 musicians, ranging from third to ninth graders, came to Manhattan Saturday from all over Kansas and other states to participate in this festival of talents.

The program was sponsored by the Manhattan Youth Symphony Association in conjunction with K-State's Department of Music, according to Warren Walker, professor of music.

"The whole philosophy in something like this is the advancement of strings and getting parents interested in their child's performance," Walker said.

THE GROUPS included beginning, intermediate and advanced students. They gained experience when they played before a public audience Sunday, Jan. 22 in McCain Auditorium.

Vaclav Nelhybel, an internationally known composer, was commissioned to write music for the orchestra groups, Walker said.

Spirits were high during the weekend as children from the beginning strings darted across the floor and slammed doors. A few shared their feelings about the "Fling."

Brian Graber, a 4th-grade violist from Lindsborg, was happy to be in the event.

"First we came here Saturday," Graber said. "We practiced four hours Saturday morning. I guess it was fun. I hope I can come back next year. Do you want to ask me any more questions?"

EIGHT-YEAR-OLD Julie Tillberg, who also plays the viola and is from Lindsborg, had mixed feelings about the occasion.

"Sometimes it's fun and sometimes it isn't because you lose your place on the paper and don't know the notes," she said.

Junior high students gave special credit to the directors of the program.

"I think that you learn so much from the different people who conduct," Chong Kim, a violinist from Independence, Mo. said. "It's fun meeting kids from other schools and getting to know them. It's a new experience; this is my second time."

"It was a lot of fun," Carolyn Cooper, a cello player from Wichita, said. "Mr. Hollowell is our director and he has been real nice. He makes things clear. We knew what to do."

ROBERT HOLLOWELL, director of the advanced orchestra, was pleased with the program.

"I think what they're doing is fantastic," he said. "There were 107 in our string orchestra. It's brand new and growing fast. It's becoming better known."

Janice Albright, a teacher in the Manhattan public schools, spoke as both teacher and parent when talking about the event.

"What they learn in the String Fling—it gives them a real identity in the program with the orchestra coming up," she said.

Some participants, however, were upset that they were not able to play as much as they would have liked. David Bollman, a 17-year-old alto saxophone player from Manhattan would have liked to play more.

"I like it, (the Fling) except some of the music parts weren't written for alto sax," he said. "It's geared for younger kids."

Diane Keaton plays at duo-identity; 'Looking for Mr. Goodbar' morbid

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Arts Editor

"Looking for Mr. Goodbar" is in the very least, a devastating motion picture. It is good in the sense that all the components are honed to perfection, but it is not enjoyable.

It is the type of film which suffocates you with the right hand, and embraces you with the left. It is grotesque, macabre, erotic and compelling. It makes the viewer think, though thoughts of this nature would be better off quelled.

Diane Keaton plays the lead role in this provocative endeavor. It is difficult to describe her character as she plays two; Theresa and Terry.

By day, she maintains a composed image as Theresa, a teacher of deaf children. By night, she reverts to Terry, shuttling between bars and bed, realizing the lusty fantasies she constantly entertains.

Keaton plays her role well, bringing off a believable characterization. She captures physical expression while keeping a cork on her emotions. Despite this, Keaton remains one in a rare breed of "style actresses," a holdover from the days of Bette Davis and Marilyn Monroe. Her "not-quite-together" stance is compatible with both facets of her character.

Theresa-Terry is into sex and self-destruction, but as to the elusive entity of the Mr. Goodbar she is looking for, it can only be speculated.

Of the four men she becomes involved with, only one seems to qualify as the straight and narrow path. To back up the self-destruction theory, Keaton chooses to be the wayfarer on the remaining three.

Unfortunately, her final lover takes a notion to stab her to death during a violent bout of sex, amidst cries of "oh gross!" from an audience leaning forward and enthralled.

This final scene, without a doubt is the most effective and affective.

Utilizing the superb camera work that is apparent throughout the film, a strobe light effect is produced that seems to emulate a heart beat. The flashes decrease in speed as the dying Keaton is stabbed again and again, painting a picture of outrageous horror.

Yuk, true, but "Looking For Mr. Goodbar" will undoubtedly be the most talked about film of the semester.

Carmen McRae live

Album promotes the jazzy style

By SCOTT FARINA
Contributing Writer

Jazz is regaining mass acceptance, but for some reason jazz vocalists remain largely ignored. A few, like Ella Fitzgerald and Mel Torme become popular stars. Most don't. Carmen McRae has not made it big in over twenty years of superb singing, but thankfully she has never stopped singing the blues.

Her latest release is a live double-set called "Carmen McRae at the Great American Music Hall" (Blue Note Records.) This lady's best work usually doesn't come out of a studio session, but from live recordings. The new album is an encyclopedia of what jazz singing is all about.

Jazz vocals are more than singing a few bars of scat (nonsense syllables); they require using the voice as an instrument of improvisation. McRae's voice slides up and down the scale as smoothly and effortlessly as a trombone. From ballads to frantic tempos, she is always in control. Unlike some singers, McRae doesn't sacrifice the lyrics to her vocal techniques. She phrases interestingly and intelligently.

The back-up band is as tasty as the singer. Dizzy Gillespie appears on several tracks, perfectly complementing McRae with his trumpet. The other musicians, Martin Otwell, keyboards; Ed Benett, bass; and Joey Baraon, percussion; play well behind the singer and perform solos which are more than time fillers.

The sound of this live recording is good. There is no coughing or foot-shuffling from the audience. The separation is good, the sound full, and the record surface clean of pops and clicks.

This is not jazz-rock or jazz-fusion or jazz-hyphen anything. This is mainstream acoustic jazz. Blue Note should be congratulated for releasing it at a time when the company is pushing more and more "crossover" acts. Carmen McRae may not be a superstar in terms of widespread popularity, but she most certainly is in musical terms.

'Coma' frightening; not a sleepy book

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
Collegian Reviewer

The institution of medicine is one of the greater paradoxes of the world. Probably the most admired and respected profession in society, it is also the most feared. The very idea of going to the family doctor, goes into surgery. When the patient goes into a coma and dies, Wheeler begins to research the recent deaths at the hospital.

Helping her is Dr. Mark Bellows, who is in charge of her instruction while she is at Memorial. Although their personalities sometimes contrast, they are attracted to one another.

The couple also look to each other for guidance. Susan, the brilliant novice, is apprehensive about her abilities as a doctor and her acceptance in a male-dominated profession. Mark, the seasoned but young professional, is also unsure of himself.

Together they find the terrifying answer to the unexplained deaths: healthy patients are being murdered and their transplantable organs removed and sold on an anatomical black market.

Realism is the hallmark of the novel. A graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Columbia University, an author of numerous scientific publications and a practicing ophthalmologist in Boston, Cook knows what he is talking about when he describes the workings of medicine in the novel.

THE ONLY weak point of the novel is the overwhelming use of medical terminology. For the average reader, the jargon of the medical profession can get tiresome, especially when the reader feels he should have a copy of Gray's Anatomy to understand the fine points of the mystery.

On the other hand, the world of medicine is fascinating. The idea of one group of human beings having a life-and-death control over the population of the world is worthy of reflection. The complexity of the human body and its functions and the treatment of disorders is equally amazing and interesting.

"Coma" is an entertaining nightmare about the people and institutions which hold the power of life over all of us. Duplicating the kind of feelings people now have about sharks, airplanes, UFO's and singles bars, readers of "Coma" will think twice about their next trip to the hospital.

much less a visit to the hospital, is enough to send persons into a panic.

Author Robin Cook plays on man's fear of medicine in the novel "Coma". Cook exploits every little anxiety people have about doctors and hospitals from incompetence and callousness to surgery and autopsy, and wraps it around a mystery that becomes a modern-day horror story.

Boston Memorial Hospital is the setting of the story. The hospital is regarded as one of the top surgical institutions in the country. For the past year or so, however, there have been almost a dozen patients who don't wake up after surgery, remaining in a comatose state until lack of oxygen to their brains causes death.

Not only were the patients sound and in good health, their surgery was minor and the risk of death minimal. Due to the hundreds of operations performed at the hospital every week, the deaths go relatively unnoticed.

UNNOTICED that is, until Susan Wheeler comes along. A medical student assigned to the hospital, she comes in contact with a patient shortly before he

Restaurant Romp on Mar's

We begin another semester of gastronomic delights with this installment of Restaurant Romp. Like last semester, the purpose of this column is to seek out the perfect dining experience in this lovely metropolis. Unfortunately, it looks to be a long semester.

The end of January is a good time to go out to eat, especially when the Christmas turkey leftovers are turning greenish-yellow and sprouting little cultures.

Granted, there are times when the cupboard is empty and the desire to go to the grocery store can be compared to the urge of calling that special little someone for the first date. Or to coin a phrase, you've got the money but not the time.

To set the record straight, the three main objectives in determining the ultimate eateries are atmosphere, quality and price. Location used to be included in the list, but the convenience and fast food "restaurants" have surrounded the campus, making the automobile standard equipment for the distinctive diner.

LOCATED east of Westloop Shopping Center, at 2615 Anderson, is one of the oldest restaurants in Manhattan. Four years ago Mar's Restaurant moved to its present location after serving the University for over a decade in the heart of Aggieville.

Open seven days a week from 11 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. and from 4:30 until 9 p.m., Mar's caters to all food tastes. Don't worry about missing dinner if you dine at noon, the menu is the same no matter when you are hungry.

Half of the menu is dedicated to American mainstays—K.C. Sirloin, $3.20; Chicken-Fried Steak, $1.60; Liver and Onions, $1.40; Grilled Chicken Livers, $1.80, and Grilled Pork Chops, $1.80, to name a few. All the dinners include salad and choice of potato.

Mar's also has an assortment of sandwiches, soup and chicken and a weak assortment of seafood.

Nevertheless, I had a desire for Chinese food (Cantonese), and with these intentions, we began the romp to Mar's.

IMMEDIATELY the diner is assaulted by a decor which can be described as early Chinese barbecue. The white pine ceiling and the paneling are a light brown which is the same color as the previous barbecue restaurant. Even the back of the chairs have the name of the former owners (Ed's).

The Chinese dinners include four types of Chow Mein, five varieties of Chop Suey and two kinds of Fried Rice. Their prices range from $1.95 to $2.40.

Being adventurous, we ordered the Beef and Green Peppers with Rice, the one-half Peking Chicken with steamed rice and the Moo Koo Guy Pen, which is sliced boneless chicken with sauteed mushrooms and vegetables.

Unfortunately, the list of appetizers is weak to non-existent. I decided to order a salad to begin the meal and was presented with a bowl of shredded lettuce and watered down Bleu cheese dressing. Tolerable for 40 cents.

THE MEAL was served promptly and if anything can be said, the portions are more than adequate. Probably the best of the three entrees was the Moo Koo Guy Pen. Bon't be put off the the looks of the dish. The Moo Koo is served in a big bowl with a side of steamed rice. The addition of the rice is necessary to soak up the juice which might otherwise overwhelm the taste of the veggies. Overall, the dish is quite good.

The Beef and Green Peppers chop suey was also served with steamed rice and I found this dish to be the weakest of the three. The flavor of the dish was lacking in distinction in that the beef and everything else tasted the same.

The third entree sampled was the Peking Chicken. This meal had some of the oddest pieces of chicken I have ever seen. But the flavor of the rather heavy gravy was good (a hint of garlic and ginger) and the overall quality was very acceptable.

On the whole, Mar's restaurant ranks very good in service with good quality and not bad prices. But as far as authentic Cantonese dining, the restaurant is still out in space.

IAC, women set for battle

The K-State Intercollegiate Athletic Council will hold its monthly gathering in the Union today. But this won't be one of those meetings in which the Council approves the minutes from the last meeting, awards letter sweaters to the basketball players, then sets the date for the next meeting.

No, this one will be much different. For on the agenda is a proposal that, if the council takes the wrong action, will undermine the entire foundation for athletics at K-State.

The proposal that has been made to Athletic Director Jersey Jermier would have the IAC consider moving up two women's sports, basketball and volleyball, to level I-A from their respective level I-B and level II standings.

Sports

THE K-STATE athletic structure is based on classifying the various sports on campus into levels. The highest level, I-A, now consists only of men's football and basketball.

The rest of the sports, both men's and women's, are bunched into the level II bracket.

What categorizes each sport in its respective level are the class definitions provided in the council's bylaws. Level I, is made up of intercollegiate sports where the major purposes include participant development, public support and revenue production.

SPORTS in level I are capable of competing on the national level and of bringing national recognition to the University. They are also typified by fan and alumni support.

Level I is further broken down into I-A and I-B. I-A sports are defined as being self-supporting.

Level I-B sports are partially self-supporting. They must receive funds from the council above and beyond the revenue they bring in.

Level II sports do not have the objective of revenue production and are basically intended for participant development.

By using these definitions, it's hard to understand how the IAC could move women's basketball and volleyball up to level I-A. These two sports do not and never have produced enough money to cover their budgets.

THE ONLY way the council could raise the levels of these two sports would be to change the bylaws or to totally disregard the definitions already established for I-A sports. In either case, the results could be disastrous.

If the bylaws were changed, it would be a tedious task and one that would only split the IAC into more sharply drawn sides between pro-men and pro-women advocates. It's likely that more bickering than business would become the rule at future meetings.

If the bylaws were ignored, that would set a precedent for the council in the future to abide by some laws and simply sidestep others.

The women want the sports moved up to I-A so they will become eligible for funding of the maximum number of scholarships as outlined by their governing body, the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women.

EVEN if the sports were given I-A status, the money allocated for each sport would still be determined by the IAC. More than likely, however, once given I-A status, the Council would not only increase scholarship money but also extend increases to other expenditures such as recruiting, travel and coaches' salaries.

The women argue that in order to produce more revenue they need better players to draw larger crowds at games. But to get better players, they must have more money to recruit, in addition to more scholarship money. So in order to get more money, their budgets must be increased. And the easiest way for this to happen is for the council to make them level I-A sports. It is a vicious circle. They can't move up until they get more money, but they probably won't get more money until they move up.

AT THIS time, I think the women should take a step back and look at the entire K-State athletic program. K-State's athletic budget is the smallest by far in the Big Eight. Yet, K-State has one of the largest allocations to women's athletics from its total budget in the conference, according to John Graham, IAC chairman, and Robert Snell, K-State's Big Eight faculty representative.

If the IAC were to move the sports up to I-A, they would be betting that by increasing expenditures they could increase revenue by drawing larger crowds at the women's basketball and volleyball games.

It would be a bet Jimmy the Greek wouldn't touch. Four years ago when the women's national basketball tournament was held in Ahearn Field House the crowds were mediocre. And these were the best teams in the country!

THE WOMEN could argue that the University has established an objective of helping women's basketball attain I-A status through affirmative action, promotion and additional financial assistance.

But to move women's basketball and volleyball up to I-A status right now, would be giving it to them, not helping them achieve it.

IN THE PAST, these sports have not proven they can be self-supportive. They have not attracted large crowds. Even if the calibre of players is increased, I doubt they could consistently lure a sizeable enough following to produce a profit.

The University and the IAC have an obligation to assist the women's programs in view of Title IX. They have done that. The women's programs at K-State have taken large strides in the past three years.

But to give women's basketball and volleyball level I-A status at this time, would seriously undermine the structure and effectiveness of the K-State athletic program by obviously disregarding the bylaws established for sports classification and budget allocation.

Wildcat track team plays host to Cowboys, Shockers tonight

The K-State track team hosts Oklahoma State and Wichita State in its second indoor meet of the season tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The competition begins at 5:30 p.m. with the field events, followed by the track events at 7 p.m. Admission is free.

K-State's strongest field events are the pole vault with Doug Knauss, a junior, and Ron Nofsinger, a sophomore, and the shotput with freshmen Ray Bradley.

Vince Parrette will compete in the 60-yard dash, 60-yard low hurdles, triple jump and perhaps the long jump. Parrette won the triple jump at the Sooner Relays last week.

KEVIN SLOAN, a junior, is the favorite in the long jump. Sloan is currently leading the Big Eight with a jump of 24 feet, six and one-half inches.

Mack Green, junior running back on the football team, will compete in the 60-yard dash. He finished only a tenth of a second behind last week's Sooner Relays winner.

Willie Major, a freshmen, should be a strong performer in the low and high hurdles, assistant coach Jerome Howe said.

The Wildcats' top performers in the running events should be Bill Tanner, a freshmen, and sophomore Ray Hanf in the quarter mile, and freshmen Ed DeLashmutter in the mile and 1,000 yards.

Skaters skim over frozen 'Puddle'; Ranger says thin ice could be unsafe

By CARLA SPEHART
Collegian Reporter

The Tuttle Creek Reservoir "puddle" can hardly be considered an ice skating rink.

Yet weekend skaters are a common sight, according to Fred Funk, chief ranger of the Corps of Engineers at Tuttle Creek.

Ice skating is permitted in the cove areas where the water is apt to be frozen solid, Funk said.

"The major problem is finding where the coves end and the main bodies of water begin," Funk said.

The rangers check the ice daily and the depth is monitored, Funk said, but the safety really depends upon how the ice freezes.

"You may have four inches near the shore and none anywhere else," he said.

"I do not particularly like to see skaters here because I'm not always convinced that it is absolutely safe," he said.

FUNK suggested determined skaters try to cove where the spillway arena is located.

"This is the most protected area which has a good surface for ice. A large hill on the north protects you from the wind," Funk said.

The coves are not labeled with danger signs where thin ice may begin, he said.

"Rangers give the people the benefit of the doubt on their intelligence to determine where it is safe to skate," Funk said.

Particular attention should be given to areas where tree trunks are protruding from the ice. The sun's rays are absorbed by the black trunks, Funk said, and the first melting usually occurs here.

No skating is allowed on the River Pond area, he said.

"Warm water released from the dam is constantly circulating in the River Pond even if the surface may appear frozen," Funks said.

A representative from the Manhattan Recreation Commission said small ravines have been flooded in Cico Park and the City Park where ice skating is open to the general public. The safety-conscious skater may find these a better alternative to Tuttle Creek.

"The ice is just a foot deep," the representative said.

Kidnap victim abandoned, assailant commits suicide

SALINA (AP)—A South Dakota man shot himself to death in the bathroom of a Salina motel Thursday afternoon in the midst of a police stakeout after he had allegedly participated in kidnapping a woman from Kansas City, Mo. and abandoning her in Manhattan.

Edward L. Wade, 20, Rapid City, S.D., suffered a gunshot wound to the chest and was dead on arrival at a Salina hospital about 4:15 p.m., police said.

Salina Police Chief John Woody said Wade shot himself in the bathroom after officers persuaded a 17-year-old girl accompanying him to let them into the motel room.

Police had staked out the motel about an hour earlier after a patrolman spotted a car sought in connection with the Wednesday night kidnapping.

The car belonged to Susan Schnelle, 27, Kansas City, who was dumped along a road near Manhattan early Thursday morning after being abducted by three men and a woman from a Kansas City car wash.

SHE WAS bound and dumped along K-177 about four miles south of Manhattan at 5:15 a.m. Thursday, according to Riley County Police Inspector John LaFond.

Schnelle was found by a truck driver 20 minutes after she had been stranded, and was taken to Memorial Hospital. She was released early Thursday afternoon and returned to Kansas City with her husband, LaFond said.

Students question location, need

Rec complex still under fire

By KAREN EWING
Collegian Reporter

With architectural plans nearing completion for the recreation complex, the opinions of students and administrators about the facility vary.

The groundbreaking date for the $3 million facility has been set for late summer or early fall, according to Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services.

Robel and Terry Matlack, student body president, agree that student interest and amount of intramural participation justify building the complex.

"We're playing until 1 a.m., using every available hour for intramural basketball. With a new facility, intramural basketball could start at 4 or 4:30 p.m. and games could be played in both Ahearn and the new rec complex. Students could drop in for more free-time activities," Robel said.

There are about 4,000 participants on 386 intramural basketball teams this year. This is an increase of 38 teams over last year, Robel said.

"Our rec services program has grown tremendously in the last five years," Matlack said. "It'll probably outstrip the facility in growth after its completion."

Student's whose fees contributed to the construction of the complex and who graduate before its completion, will be allowed to use the complex when visiting the campus, Robel said. A computer printout will record the names of students eligible to use the complex.

OTHER student's reactions to the complex vary. Some students interviewed voiced a concern for a larger fieldhouse.

"I think we should turn the fieldhouse into a rec center and build a new fieldhouse for spectator events to accommodate all faculty and students," Denise McNickle, freshman in general, said.

"The Washburn site is a bad location," Warren Elheridge, senior in health and physical recreation, said. "I feel its pretty stupid the way the administrators and faculty handled it."

"I am in favor of stopping any more work on the present plan for the rec center and maybe even cancelling the whole affair," Roger Holyfield, senior in finance, said.

"They ought to consider building a complete new fieldhouse while renovating Ahearn to house more activities, but before anything is done I think students will have to show more interest one way or the other," Jim Dullea, junior in landscape architecture, said.

"There's always complaints for more fieldhouse space when student are buying tickets," Robel said.

THE FACILITY will be totally recreational with no interference from physical education or K-State athletics, Robel said. The building will be open daily from 6 a.m. to midnight.

"Just looking at participation in rec complexes on other campuses, it would be used to the maximum," he said. "For example, OSU (Oklahoma State University) uses theirs to the maximum and taxed themselves into another $1 million complex addition."

In the meantime, Robel said he plans to keep the intramural program going. Physical education classes will have to be scheduled early Friday afternoon or early Monday morning.

"We won't cut basketball intramural teams. If students want to participate, we'll fit it in," he said.

A referendum to increase student activity fees to fund the rec complex was put before K-State students in February 1976. More than 5,500 voters participated in the largest voter turnout in K-State's history with 71.6 percent of the voters favoring the building of a complex.

"The tremendous demand of young people and faculty to keep in shape is at a high level," said Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs. "Utilization of time for exercise is expanding greatly. I see the rec complex as being used to its maximum capacity."

Federal money is not the answer

Doctors, Dole discuss health care

 By JASON SCHAFF
 Staff Writer

Money from the federal government is not the answer to rural health problems, according to Kansas health officials and physicians attending a senate subcommittee hearing on rural health chaired by Kansas Senator Robert Dole Saturday in the K-State Union.

Robert Dole

Several of those testifying said the government should give localities time to digest the effectiveness of certain existing federal programs before additional money or regulation is directed toward rural Kansas.

"We have more programs, more money and more regulations than we know what to do with," said Dwight Metzler, executive director of the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

METZLER and James Wilson, Kansas director of health, told Dole the federal government could help localities by improving data collection and education systems for health care rather than increasing the regulation of local health care systems.

The men said there should be an aim toward such preventive health care as home health care and nutritional education rather than a pouring of money into treatment of diagnosed illnesses.

Dole is the ranking Republican on the Senate Health Subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee. The hearing was the first concerning rural health to be held by the committee, the other two are to be February 13 in Missouri.

Metzler and Wilson were joined by other panelists who said maldistribution of medical manpower is a major problem facing rural health care in Kansas.

"Physicians in rural Kansas work harder and longer than their big city brothers," said Richard Browning, chairman of the Health Planning Association of Western Kansas, Inc.

A COMBINATION of a lack of adequate educational facilities, recreational opportunities and social life steer many medical school graduates from working in rural areas, Browning said.

William Newman, executive director of the Northeast Kansas Health Systems Agency in Topeka said 15 percent of physicians in the state are foreign medical school graduates and many work in rural areas. He added that some counties have only foreign doctors.

Several of the panel members said it was up to individual communities to attract Kansas medical school graduates and not necessarily the responsibility of the University of Kansas Medical School to provide tuition exemptions for graduates who work in rural areas.

Other panelists said federal Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement policies have hindered rural health care. Federal funds have been cut off to hospitals which have used portions of their facilities for long term care.

"The most certain way to keep physicians out of rural America is the increasing regulation of rural hospitals," Dr. John Neuen-schwander of Hoxie said.

The scarcity of physicians' assistants in rural areas was also identified as a problem.

"Without allied health personnel, then the large increase in physicians would be of little value," said Curtis Erickson, executive director of the Great Plains Lutheran Hospital in Phillipsburg.

Task Force proposes hike in price of parking permit

 By ANDREA CARVER
 Collegian Reporter

Doubling the price of parking permits for students, faculty, staff and reserved stalls is one of the recommendations of the Student Senate Task Force on Traffic and Parking to reduce parking congestion at K-State.

Raising the price of parking permits would provide an incentive for students living close to campus to walk and would help provide spaces for students who have to drive, according to Mark Hoffman, task force chairman.

Doubling parking fees would make student permits $20, faculty and staff permits $40 and reserved permits $100 per year. The increase would still keep parking cheaper than other comparable universities, Hoffman said.

"Twenty dollars isn't that much, really, and is still cheaper than most schools," he said.

ANOTHER recommendation is a ban on selling permits to students, faculty and staff living within five blocks of campus, Hoffman said.

The ban would be hard to implement because people would be against it, Hoffman said, but the ban complimented by a permit fee increase would reduce parking problems.

"Both of them are good ideas, and we felt both of them would do a good job," he said.

Terry Matlack, student body president, said he would be opposed to an increase in permit fees because it would hurt the lower-income student who needs a parking permit.

"I think we should base our distribution of parking permits on the basis of need and not on the ability to pay," Matlack said.

The recommendation to raise the permit fee was the only part he wouldn't favor, he added.

The task force, created by senate almost a year ago, submitted a report and recommendations about parking at K-State to senate last Thursday.

Sadat will visit Carter to negotiate weapons aid, ask for U.S. sympathy

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—President Anwar Sadat's upcoming trip to the United States appears to have a three-fold purpose: to ask U.S. leaders to put political pressure on Israel, lobby Congress for arms aid and sell his negotiating position to the American public.

Sadat is scheduled to huddle with President Carter in the secluded surroundings of Camp David, Md., Saturday and Sunday for discussions on the current status of Middle East peace negotiations. He also plans meetings with key members of Congress and the media.

Egyptian diplomats, legislators and newspapers are calling for a change in what they see as America's "blind support" of Israel militarily and its unwillingness to alienate a longtime political ally.

"The trip would be a real success should we succeed in changing the U.S. position," said a Sunday editorial in Al Gomhouria, one of Cairo's three leading daily newspapers.

"We do not ask the Americans to take sides with us but we want a frank answer to this question: is the U.S. ready to defend Israel within its borders or is it ready to defend its expansions as well?"

IN A JOINT statement Saturday, the Egyptian parliament's national security and foreign relations committees called for "more decisive and effective" U.S. pressure on the Israelis. One senior Egyptian diplomat has accused the Carter administration of being "very weak" and even "gutless" when it came to using its muscle on Israel.

The two committees also criticized U.S. arms sales to Israel on grounds they provoke Israeli intransigence at the negotiating table.

Ogden couple dies from asphyxiation

An Ogden man and woman were found dead of apparent asphyxiation Saturday morning according to Riley County Police Department (RCPD) official.

RCPD Sergeant French said the probable cause of death was asphyxiation from a gas space heater in the house.

The two were found about 9:30 a.m. in a house at the Elfin Acres trailer court in Ogden after a neighbor reported they had been missing for several days, French said.

The neighbor said he reported a foul odor coming from the house.

RCPD has not released the names of the dead pending notification of relatives.

Sadat made it clear in a speech to the Egyptian parliament on Jan. 21 he is seeking arms parity with Israel. Unable to purchase Soviet weapons because of a diplomatic squabble in 1972 and limited to buying nonlethal armaments from the United States, Sadat said he has asked Carter "to arm Egypt with all the weapons Israel has."

The Egyptian president argues he needs modern arms not to attack Israel but to thwart Soviet ambitions throughout Africa, particularly because of Russian support for Ethiopia in its conflict with Moslem Somali.

Sadat hopes to put pressure on Israel through a public relations campaign during his U.S. visit. Using television interviews and news conferences, Egyptian sources said, Sadat hopes to convince the American public that Israel is to blame for the stalled peace talks.

Egypt also will seek support from several European nations when Sadat meets with heads of state from Britain, West Germany, Austria, Romania and France during stops on his way home from Washington.

As for more concrete developments arising from Sadat's trip, Foreign Minister Mohamed Ibrahim Kamel has said not to expect Carter and Sadat to finalize any declaration of Mideast peace principles because of the "big gap" now separating Israeli and Egyptian positions.

Mideast military talks begin, Egypt, Israel cool word war

JERUSALEM (AP)—Israel decided Sunday to resume military talks with Egypt, giving a new push to Middle East peace negotiations following a cooling of the public war of words between the two countries and intensive backstage U.S. diplomatic efforts.

The military talks in Cairo between defense ministers are expected to resume early this week. But there was no indication after Sunday's regular Israeli cabinet meeting when the parallel political negotiations in Jerusalem might resume.

"That is up to Egypt," cabinet secretary Aryeh Naor said after the three and a half-hour session. "It wasn't Israel that broke off the talks."

Israeli officials said, however, that agreement is possible as early as this week — before Egyptian President Anwar Sadat confers with President Jimmy Carter in Washington — on a joint "declaration of principles" to outline future negotiations.

Naor said Sunday: "Agreement is coming closer."

The military talks on an Israeli pullout from the Sinai Peninsula recessed Jan. 13, deadlocked on Israel's demands to maintain a score of settlements in the desert wilderness.

THE following week political negotiations between foreign ministers on the Palestinian issue broke down after the first day. Sadat abruptly recalled his foreign minister and each side charged the other with sabotaging the talks.

While both political and military talks were stalled, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Alfred Atherton, based in a Jerusalem hotel, worked on refining the proposed declaration of principles.

Atherton leaves Monday for Cairo to get Egyptian reaction to the Israeli draft and is scheduled to return to Washington at midweek, U.S. officials said.

Atherton briefed Jordan's King Hussein in Amman Saturday.

Oil companies appeal ruling

BOSTON—Major oil companies and a business lobby will ask a federal appeals court Monday to overturn a U.S. District Court judge's order delaying the sale of offshore oil drilling leases in the rich fishing grounds of Georges Bank off the Massachusetts coast.

Judge Arthur Garrity's order, issued Saturday, prevents the government from receiving millions of dollars worth of bids in New York Tuesday on leases for more than 880,000 acres in the Atlantic.

In granting a request by the state and the Conservation Law Foundation, an environmentalist group, for a preliminary injunction stopping the auction, Garrity said U.S. Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus "has done less than he should, in my opinion, to preserve the natural resources on Georges Bank, which he is bound to do."

Soviets increase air power

WASHINGTON—Russia's development of an Air Force capable of devastating attack into western Europe suggests it may "no longer plan for inevitable rapid escalation to nuclear weapons," according to a Brookings Institution study.

The study released Sunday said that Soviet tactical air forces built in the early 1960s for a short nuclear war have been modernized with a wide variety of advanced warplanes and weapons.

While the study said Russia remains prepared for eventual use of nuclear weapons, it may choose instead to send massive air strikes to destroy North Atlantic Alliance air bases and nuclear storage depots.

This, it said, might deprive NATO of its nuclear response option and assure that Soviet ground forces could move into NATO territory.

Cambodia stops attacks

BANGKOK Thailand—Cambodia said Sunday its forces had repulsed two Vietnamese attacks into northeastern Cambodian provinces.

Radio Phnom Penh said the Vietnamese intruded into the northeastern province of Ratanakiri Friday but withdrew after a Cambodian counter-attack along Highway 19.

The broadcast also said its forces repulsed an attack Wednesday in Kirirom Province after a five-hour clash with Vietnamese troops which had penetrated up to one kilometer into Cambodia.

In recent weeks both countries have accused each other of incursions and artillery attacks along the frontier. There is no sign that the two sides are close to negotiating a halt to the fierce border war which intensified sharply in December but appears to have subsided recently.

Antique house rebuilt

BOWEN, Ill.—A 191-year-old house built 50 years before the first white settlers came to western Illinois is being reconstructed in the middle of a cornfield here by a pig farmer and his wife.

John Dittmer, 32, and his wife Arlis bought and moved the two-story frame house 1,200 miles from Westfield, Mass., where Col. William Moseley built it in 1786, when the bleak prairies here were still the domain of the Indians and buffalo.

By this spring, after more than a year of rebuilding, the Dittmers, say they will be able to move in to their new home.

Until last year the Dittmers were typical antique buffs, filling a rented home with primitive furniture and hunting in vain for an old farmhouse to restore.

"We considered building a new reproduction of a colonial home ... that was the era of history and architecture we'd become particularly interested in," said Mrs. Dittmer, who was born in Chicago.

Death toll hits 14 in KC hotel fire

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Workers poking through the debris of the fire-gutted Coates House hotel in near-zero temperatures Sunday discovered five more bodies, one a small child, raising the death toll to 14.

Only an ice-coated shell remained of the landmark hotel's south wing Sunday as the workers, aided by heavy equipment, dug through the rubble. Smoldering ruins on the shaky upper floors prevented firemen from immediately examining that part of the hotel.

The fire of undetermined origin swept through the 110-year-old hotel in downtown Kansas City early Saturday.

Fire Chief John Waas said nine bodies were found in or near the charred building Saturday, and five others were recovered Sunday from the ruins of the six-story frame and stone building.

Eighteen persons remained unaccounted for, while nine others were injured and 106 escaped unharmed.

WAAS said that the longer none of the missing turned up elsewhere, the better the chances were that they would be found dead in the hotel ruins.

"But you never know when or where these people will show up," he said. "They might be visiting relatives or something."

Most of the hotel's 147 residents, however, existed on meager incomes and many of them were elderly, renting rooms in the once-elegant Kansas City showcase at $12 to $17 per week.

The possibility of more bodies threatened to push the fire toll past the record 15 killed in a 1924 apartment fire in Kansas City.

The cause of the fire remained undetermined Sunday, and Waas indicated it would probably be some time before it was known.

Waas said the fact that the fire appeared to have started on one of the upper three floors seemed to discount the possibility of arson.

Congratulations to protesting farmers

Independent Kansas farmers tasted victory Thursday night in Salina — and it was good.

A controversial "cash-rent" auction of farmland, said to be the first such public auction in Kansas history, was brought to a halt under the psychological barrage of more than 600 protesting farmers.

The over-whelming presence of this group packed into the auction room intimidated those who came to bid.

THE AUCTION WAS called off with only one of nine consigned land tracts auctioned off for rent bid of $46 per acre.

The farmers detest the concept of cash-rent auction because it pits farmer against farmer in a situation that could drive the price of farming rented land to unbearable limits.

The cash-rent system requires 50 percent of the cash rent for the land in advance of the farm year, and the rest at the end.

There is no provision in this system for low market prices or a crop lost to the elements.

IN THIS CRITICAL time in American agriculture, there is no place for this kind of system.

But the system is being used in Kansas in a more clandestine manner — the closed bid cash-rent system — by both the federal government and by private land owners.

The auction and realty company that handled the auction in Salina Thursday night chose to publicly auction the land for the sake of openness and fairness. For this they should be commended.

THE AUCTIONEERS undoubtedly learned a great deal about the attitudes of the farmers Thursday night, and will profit from this knowledge.

Auctioneers and land owners should realize that Kansas farmers, unlike their predecessors, are becoming organized into functional alliances.

And they are just beginning to realize how much power they can wield.

To the Kansas farmers — congratulations — for having the courage to fight for your survival, and for the survival of us all.

Today, the beginning of another week of fun-filled, action-packed, and crazy convulsions, is known as Monday. Mondays are as popular to the college student as a patient's bad breath is to the dentist.

Mondays are hard on everybody. Factory workers are at their least productive state. If you don't believe this, check the records on those 10 million Mr. Coffees which were equipped with the free Electro-smoke option.

Assembly line workers aren't too alert on their first day back at work. There is a term for this used by the consumer in describing his automobile — the "lemon."

To insure yourself of a lemon, just purchase any car, from Jaguar to Jockswagen, that was assembled on a Monday. You are guaranteed of being kept alert by squeaks and being squeezed out of as much money in repairs by the dealer as is possible.

GROCERY CHECKERS ARE notorious for being alert on Mondays. In many stores, a little sign at the side of register cheerfully announces that should the price of an item not be broadcasted by the checker the lucky customer will be presented with the gracious prize of a half quart of ice milk.

Unfortunately, after resting the fingers of the right hand for two days, the checkers' (Food Flinger's) dexterity is heightened and they are rip-rearin' to yell out "2 for 89, 6 for $1.29" etc.

Monday is also a bad day for professors. In one study a group of college technicians were monitored on Mondays and then again on Fridays. This test was conducted to see if there were visible changes in the practices of classroom instructors. Trust me, there was a difference.

THE REPORT indicated Mondays to be the day in which verbosity runs rampant in lectures and physical gestures were nonexistent. Mondays were also proved to be a day when instructors acknowledge the least amount of raised hands. This was due to their eyes being unopened because the lectures were 12 years old.

On Fridays the exact opposite was indicated. Professors were actually physically gestating — there were more pauses accompanied by "ers, um, and uh" and the answering of questions was noticeably greater. The study offers two explanations.

The first reason offered is that since the lectures aren't too updated the amount of material covered is increased. It was found there was material of one and a half lectures given on Mondays while Fridays' lecture material was cut in half.

THE STUDY ALSO indicates the professors eyes were opened on Fridays nervously searching for questions to fill up the time.

The second reason offered by the disruptions they repeatedly pelted innocent spectators with discarded cups and other debris.

After the game I overheard a number of people commenting on this behavior as they left the fieldhouse.

It is disturbing that such behavior should be tolerated, not just by fieldhouse officials, but by the fraternity itself (I was under the impression that fraternal organizations stressed high levels of integrity).

But most disturbing to me is that as college students, these people expect to be considered as adults, but they apparently do not feel any obligation to behave as such.

Sig Eps 'childish'

Editor,

I consider myself lucky to have a reserved season ticket for the K-State basketball games. Unfortunately, however, I am required to sit near a group appearing to be from Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. This group's behavior during previous games has been far from perfect but their antics Saturday proved them to be inconsiderate, rude, childish and very unsportsmanlike.

There are those of us who come to watch the games, and then there are those like the Sigma Phi Epsilon members that come to act like idiots, and in doing so prevent others from enjoying what they have paid to see.

Perhaps if people do not intend to support the team, and act as responsible adults while doing so, then they should sell their seats to someone who would. I, for one, would rather sit by the opposing team's fans than by poorly behaved K-State students that do not deserve to be there.

Greeks disrupt fans in Ahearn

Editor,

On behalf of the several hundred people for whom Saturday's K-State-Oklahoma game was one of almost total distraction and for the several thousand more who were disturbed by periodic outbursts, I would like to thank the members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity for their outrageous, obnoxious and totally discourteous behavior during the game.

In case that any of the involved members of the fraternity may have suffered a memory lapse over the weekend, I will refresh their memory concerning the aforementioned behavior.

Disregarding the almost constant flow of traffic that the Sig Eps managed to impose upon those around them, their barbarity consisted of loud and totally unnecessary outbursts during both halves of the game and the half-time.

During the halftime recognition of Girdner Crofoot, the Sig Eps neither acknowledged Mr. Crofoot's contributions nor allowed those seated near them to hear his acceptance speech.

In addition to their vocal

Can't trust that day

THE STUDY ALSO indicates the professors eyes were opened on Fridays nervously searching for questions to fill up the time.

The second reason offered by the study was that students were attuned to this pattern and asked questions which had little bearing on the material supposed to be covered. They realized the professors were hurting for subject material to expound on, so inane questions are in order. It is in this relationship the student and instructor help each other though the week.

And what of that lowly creature known of as the college student.

Latest reports indicate the day known as Monday, although not popular, is necessary in maintaining any facsimile of sanity.

Monday is that time in which all of the brain cells which were destroyed or leaked out during the weekend are replaced.

But look at it this way, there are only 15 more Mondays to go this semester.

Men in ballet stereotyped

Editor,

Re: Your front page ballet photo, Jan. 25 Collegian.

Please be advised that I and the three other male members of my class are very much at ease in Ballet 2. There IS another world outside the stereotyping provincialism of photo caption writers—one which consists of theater, dance, music and all the visual arts.

K-State, like many other institutions of higher learning, has been dominated by the twin gods of intercollegiate "big time" athletics and science-technology. And, like many similar institutions, K-State has made attempts to remove some of the fine arts from their exile of catacombs and cubbyholes, unused nooks and crannies, and has provided them with suitable facilities.

Nuke plants imperfect

Editor,

This letter is in reference to the Collegian's Jan. 24 article on security at K-State's TRIGIA Mark II nuclear reactor. I find appalling the attitudes of Dean Eckhoff, head of nuclear engineering, and Michael McEwan and Richard Faw, supervisor and director of the reactor laboratory.

Their comments about the nation-wide regulation of nuclear power plants and reactors reflects, in general, the thinking of that industry: we don't need any rules to follow; our system is completely safe and foolproof; we are going to do whatever we want to get around regulations.

IN REGARDS to the regulations at K-State's nuclear reactor, the safeguarding which protects the citizen, McEwan said, "We fought it the best we could. We wrote letters saying we didn't want the new regulations. It's a hassle for us to have to conform to more and more regulations, especially when we have to foot the bill."

One only needs to look at the records of nuclear plants being built and see that the construction is far from perfect. One reactor was closed for being built on an earthquake fault. Two reactors are sitting barren and isolated on the outside of Detroit because they never got going. Plutonium is disappearing unaccounted for, and wastes are seeping out of the radioactive storage facility in Georgia...the list could go on and on.

This combined with the attitude shown by Eckhoff, McEwan and Faw, could turn out to be the ultimate mistake in reference to the nuclear reactor at K-State.

McCain AUDITORIUM with its accompanying facilities and attractions provides a (pardon the expression!) cultural atmosphere where many forms of art can thrive. This alone, however, is not enough.

An attitude, originally a result of geographical isolation and now maintained by middle-class tradition, limits the arts to a knowledgeable elite who are in some way different from everyone else. It is simply another provincial stereotype, such as "men are out of their depth in ballet," which fosters such a notion.

Black South African leader pledges fight for equality

SOWETO, South Africa (AP)—Stressing unity and self-reliance, Zulu Chief Gatsha Buthelezi told a throng of 10,000 blacks Sunday they have "reached the crossroads" in the fight for racial equality in white-ruled South Africa.

The leader of the 5.5 million Zulus, the country's largest tribe, told the roaring crowd who packed a football stadium: "We owe it to the founding fathers of the African National Congress, now banned, and their successors, some deceased, some exiled and some incarcerated, to uphold the tradition of this titanic struggle for liberation."

Buthelezi, 49, the most vociferous government critic within the country who has not been jailed, attracted what appeared to be the largest black audience ever at political rally in Soweto, a segregated township of 1.5 million, located 10 miles southwest of Johannesburg. The majority of the residents are Zulus. Police are frequently out in force in the restive township, but there was no sign of them Sunday.

BUTHELEZI was officially allowed to speak on the understanding his theme would be upcoming elections in the tribal homeland he leads, Kwazulu, some 300 miles south of here.

It is one of seven black homelands destined to follow the two already granted internationally unrecognized independence by South Africa under its apartheid policy of racial separation.

This restricts political rights for the 19 million black majority to the 13 percent of the country set aside as tribal "homelands."

Buthelezi, who has firmly rejected independence for his fragmented homeland, demanding universal suffrage in a single South Africa, raised his right arm in a black power salute and shouted "freedom."

This brought a thunderous cheer of "in our lifetime" from the crowd.

IT WAS the Zulu prince's first visit to Soweto since 1976 when he addressed a rally for his Inkatha National Cultural Liberation Movement shortly before the outbreak of nationwide black rioting which left some 700 dead.

"We have now reached the crossroads," Buthelezi said. "We must face up to this reality of South African politics. Whites in general are prepared to go into a shoot-out spree against the powerless rather than share power."

Buthelezi, who has said he rejects violence—a policy adopted by the African National Congress and other militant black movements with guerillas under training outside the country—wore a military-style Inkatha uniform.

He urged blacks to remember the dead of racial clashes over the more than three centuries since whites arrived in South Africa.

During his three-hour address, Buthelezi drew wild applause from an audience which ranged from western-dressed black professionals to rural migratory workers wearing animal skins and brandishing spears and shields.

Cancer claims K-State instructor

Abraham Hostetter, 77, professor emeritus of industrial engineering at K-State, died of cancer Friday afternoon at St. Mary Hospital.

Hostetter, a native Kansan, taught at K-State from 1930 to 1969. He is survived by his widow Franc and three sons.

Political appointees disclose prior clients to avoid conflict

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter's choice for general counsel of the Department of Energy spent much of his time as a private attorney representing an oil company and a natural gas firm.

The head of the Justice Department's antitrust division used to work for a law firm that represented General Motors.

And Carter's special ambassador for negotiations with Canada is one of the leading partners of a Washington firm that has advised the Canadian government.

THESE lawyers and top-level Carter appointees — Department of Energy Counsel-designate Lynn Coleman, Assistant Attorney General for Antitrust John Shenefield and Ambassador Lloyd Cutler—have revealed the names of former clients to avoid allegations of conflict of interest in their public jobs.

Both Coleman and Shenefield have pledged to disqualify themselves from any official actions involving former clients.

Letters listing the clients were released Sunday by Public Citizen, a Ralph Nader group.

The movement of persons between government and private business has been called a "revolving door," and has been subject to criticism because of potential and actual conflicts of interest.

"The whole conflict-of-interest controversy has focused on when attorneys leave government and then appear before the agencies they once worked for on behalf of a private client, instead of focusing on the conflicts that attorneys for big business bring with them into government," said Mark Green of Public Citizen. "Lynn Coleman is a perfect example of this."

TOPEKA—A bill prohibiting the sale of alcohol on certain election days and Sundays in Kansas was nearly amended to drastically change state liquor laws Thursday.

The House Federal and State Affairs Committee met to take action on the bill, but it was quickly amended.

Rep. Neal Whitaker (R-Wichita) moved to amend the bill deleting two sections which would in effect allow the sale of alcohol on Sunday and election days.

The amendment lost in a tie vote and the committee then decided to table the bill.

The committee also had trouble deciding on a bill which would shorten the hours private clubs can stay open.

THE BILL would not allow the sale of liquor in clubs between 12:30 a.m. and 9 a.m. and 12:30 a.m. and noon on Sundays.

In other statehouse action Thursday, the Senate Federal and State Affairs committee voted to draw up a bill giving the state Alcohol and Beverage Control Division (ABC) more authority in inspection of wholesalers and licensing.

Tom Kennedy, ABC director, asked that the committee approve a proposal to transfer the authority in these areas from the Division of Taxation to ABC.

Currently ABC has the authority to inspect wholesalers of strong beer (any beer containing more than 3.2 percent alcohol) but no one has ever inspected wholesalers of 3.2 beer, Kennedy said.

COMMITTEE members were surprised to find that "faith" is the only guarantee that the state is receiving the correct amount of tax on the alcohol from 3.2 wholesalers.

ABC would establish regulations for tax refunds when a wholesaler receives damaged merchandise, Kennedy said. Currently, if a 3.2 wholesaler needs a tax refund, the state simply "takes his word for it," according to Bill Schutte, an assistant to the attorney general and counsel for ABC at the hearing.

Kennedy said the transfer of authority would make inspections and licensing more efficient.

Kent Kalb, director of the Kansas Department of Revenue said he had the authority to administer the transfer but would rather have a statute authorizing such a change.

SOME committee members asked the officials how rigid the distinction was between 3.2 percent beer and beer with a higher alcoholic content.

Rep. Neil Arasmith (R-Phillipsburg) asked what the possibility was in doing away with 3.2 beer in Kansas.

Mark Boranyak, a representative of the Kansas Beer Wholesalers Association said elimination of 3.2 beer would probably necessitate a raising of the legal drinking age in the state. Besides, Boranyak said most strong beer sold in Kansas is little above the 3.2 level.

"There is no six-point beer being sold in the state. That's just an old wives tale," he said.

Boranyak also said elimination of 3.2 percent beer would result in a loss of revenue particularly in college areas.

Flu bug isn't biting, but pneumonia may

That flu you have probably isn't the flu.

The flu has not become a problem at K-State, but a mild form of pneumonia is going around, according to Dr. Robert Sinclair, director of Lafene Student Health Center.

"We don't have an epidemic right now, although we do have mycoplasma pneumonia going around," he said.

"Kansas has had a problem with this type of pneumonia. We noticed it here last semester," Sinclair said.

According to current "Medical Diagnosis and Treatment" (1974), the symptoms for mycoplasma pneumonia may be mild, as in the common cold or flu.

The disease often begins as a mild upper respiratory tract infection. It proceeds to a dry cough which grows worse, increasing fever, hoarseness, headache, and generalized aching. Extreme fatigue is common.

Treatment may be with prescribed antibiotics, probably tetracycline, Sinclair said.

With students living so close together, there is a greater chance for disease to spread, he said.

Also students who get very little sleep and don't eat properly risk more problems if they get ill.

"Infectious diseases seem to occur when the weather changes," Sinclair said.

"The next bump will come when it warms up," he said.

Overtime romp . . . Danner, Blackman, Redding, Evans play key roles in win

By BARNEY PARKER
Sports Editor

Curtis Redding came through in the clutch and Mike Evans sewed up the overtime.

But it was Dean Danner who took the hero's role when no one else wanted it as the K-State Wildcats dealt Oklahoma their 28th straight loss in Ahearn Field House in overtime Saturday afternoon, 73-64.

The win gives K-State a 3-4 Big Eight record and a 12-7 mark overall. It also moves the Wildcats into a three-way tie for fourth place in the conference with Missouri and Oklahoma.

THOUGHTS of "he's doing it again," must have raced through the minds of 11,200 K-State fans as Redding, with 25 seconds remaining in regulation, stole an inbounds pass in front of the Oklahoma bench and dribbled for the K-State goal where he stuffed in the points which knotted the game at 58-58.

In the overtime Evans took control of the momentum K-State gained from Redding's bucket, and canned two 20-footers which started a 15-6 K-State romp. Evans also downed two free throws and grabbed at least one big rebound in the extra period.

Throughout the game Evans and Rolando Blackman provided K-State's scoring punch, finishing with 28 and 14 points, respectively. Evans was 12-of-19 from the field and 4-for-4 from the line while Blackman was 4-for-6 from the field and 6-of-7 from the line.

Evans and Blackman combined to score 20 of K-State's first 22 points in the first half for an eight point lead with 7:22 remaining.

AFTER that Oklahoma battled back to cut the lead to 26-24 with 3:01 remaining.

With Oklahoma threatening to take the lead after its comeback, it was Danner who scored six points in the next three minutes as the half ended with K-State leading 32-30.

Danner scored two more key buckets late in the second half as the Wildcats struggled to maintain their lead. The 6-5 sophomore from Manhattan made 4-of-6 shots and grabbed three rebounds in the game, while playing only 14 minutes.

Danner said his improved play was the result of a talk he had with Coach Jack Hartman after the Missouri game.

"He told me I hadn't been playing with the idea of going in and scoring 10 points and getting some rebounds," he said. "I'd just been trying not to make mistakes. I've been working on going in and contributing more."

The K-State win overshadowed good shooting by Oklahoma's Cary Carrabine and Al Beal. Carrabine, a 6-3

'Cats hand UNLV first loss; claim Classic second place

LAWRENCE—The K-State women's basketball team defeated the University of Nevada Las-Vegas Lady Rebels Friday night 89-62, but fell to the Kansas Lady Jayhawks Saturday 76-63 to claim second place in the Kansas Lady Jayhawk Classic.

Nevada Las-Vegas, undefeated and averaging over 100 points an outing going in to Friday's first round game, was given a taste of its own medicine by the 'Cats who exhibited an effective run and gun offense.

K-State shot 56 percent from the field in the first half and finished the game by hitting 39 of 78 shots for 50 percent.

THE LADY Rebels defeated K-

State last week in Las Vegas 113-84, but this time around the 'Cats applied an aggressive zone defense which held the Lady Rebels to almost 40 points under their average.

Sports

The 'Cats were led in scoring by Gayla Williams, who dropped in a season high 28 points. Beth Boggs followed with 19 points, Eilleen Feeney had 12 and Sara Hackerott added 10.

The K-State defense held Belinda Candler, Nevada Las-Vegas' leading scorer averaging over 25 points a game, to 18 points.

K-STATE coach Judy Akers was pleased with her team's performance. "I'm surprised that we played that well for 40 minutes. They did everything I asked them to," Akers said.

It was a different story for the 'Cats Saturday as they were defeated by the Kansas Lady Jayhawks in the championship game.

KU's standout freshman, Lynette Woodard, dominated the game by pouring in 31 points and pulling down 33 rebounds. Teammate Adrian Mitchell added 23 points.

BOGGS led the Wildcats' effort with 14 points, followed by Hackerott and Williams who combined for 22 points.

The 'Cats, who nipped the Lady Jayhawks Wednesday night in Lawrence, 66-65, did not display the effective offense against the Jayhawks that they had the night before against the Lady Rebels.

"We didn't move our offense well," Akers said. "I think we were standing an awful lot."

Akers believes a combination of K-State hesitation and KU's aggressiveness cost the 'Cats the game.

"They started out more aggressive than they did Wednesday night," Akers said.

"We hesitated. We didn't go to the boards."

THE SPLIT in the Jayhawk Classic moves the 'Cats record to 11-12.

Next up for the 'Cats will be Wichita State Tuesday night in Ahearn Field House. Tipoff is slated for 7:35.

IAC nixes women's change

By DICK WAGNER
Collegian Reporter

The K-State Intercollegiate Athletic Council Friday voted down a proposal to elevate women's basketball and volleyball to Level I-A sports.

The vote came after about 20 minutes of discussion, in which only two council members strongly spoke out in favor of the proposal. Betsy Bergen, associate professor in family and child development, and Henry Camp, assistant professor in sociology, were the vocal supporters of the movement.

"Other guidelines for I-A sports have been met," Bergen said. "If we are going to hold to them (guidelines) then there are other sports in Level I that should not be there."

"I don't think that we should continue to keep the top level sports just men only," she said. "It's not necessarily a money item as much as it is a discriminatory item."

CAMP SIDED with Bergen, saying he felt that K-State had a moral obligation to support women's athletics.

"Money is primarily a moral position," Camp said. "Part of our obligation, since we are a public education institution, is to go beyond dollars and cents."

Despite these arguments, the council voted to stay within the definition of Level I-A by not allowing the women's basketball and volleyball teams to be elevated to that status. By definition, level I-A sports must be self-supporting. Neither women's basketball or volleyball is.

guard, who had been shooting only 36 percent from the field in Big Eight play, downed 10-of-17 shots for 20 points.

Beal, a 6-9 forward, scored Oklahoma's last eight points in regulation play. For the game he scored 20 points on 7 of 11 shooting.

Oklahoma won the rebounding war, but only by a 33-30 margin. The Sooners also played "the smartest game we've played all year," according to Coach Dave Bliss, without the services of guard Aaron Curry, their leading scorer, who was out with a sprained ankle.

Bliss also said he thought Oklahoma would have won the game if the referees had called a foul on Rolando Blackman when he blocked a shot by Stan Whitley with four seconds left in regulation play.

AFTER driving the length of the court Whitley tried to put up a short baseline shot that Blackman rejected.

"When he went back (to shoot) the ball was all there," Blackman said, "so I just made sure it didn't go near the rim."

Blackman, who blocked three shots in the game, thought "he (the referee) was going to call a foul," on the play. "It was clean," Blackman said of the block.

"I thought Whitley got fouled," Bliss said. "If it had been Mike Evans going to the bucket, they would have called the foul."

Wildcats break track records

With two sophomores, Vince Parrette and Ed DeLashmutt, setting the pace, the K-State men's track team recorded an easy victory over Wichita State and Oklahoma State in a triangular indoor meet in Ahearn Field House Friday night.

The Wildcats, who won 10 of 16 events, rolled up 92 points in the process. The Shockers finished second with 44½ points while O-State finished last with 34½.

Parrette showed his versatility as he set a meet record in the triple jump and added second-place finishes in the 60-yard dash and the 60-yard low hurdles.

DeLashmutt won the mile and the 1,000 yard run. His time in the mile was 4:12.9 while he ran 2:15.3 in the 1,000.

PARRETTE'S meet record in the triple jump was just one of four new meet records established. His jump of 51-8 easily bettered the old mark of 48-2.

K-State's Kevin Sloan leaped 24-3 in the long jump to break the former meet mark of 23-8. Another Wildcat, Willie Major, added a new record in the 60-yard low hurdles. Major's time of 6.9 nudged him past the old mark of 7.0.

The final meet record was by Vic Everett of Wichita State. Everett ran 31.4 in the 300-yard dash to top the old mark of 31.6.

The other K-State winners were Mack Green, 60-yard dash (6.2); Doug Knauss, pole vault (16-1); Ray Bradley, shot put (54-0); Greg Schlatter 880 (1:59.0) and the mile relay team, consisting of Bill Tanner, Issac Marks, Darnell Washington and DeLashmutt in a time of 3:21.4.

Merger boosts health service

By BILL MOHR
Collegian Reporter

In an effort to increase mental health services in the area, the North Central Kansas Guidance Center, located in Manhattan, has recently joined operations with the Pawnee Comprehensive Mental Health Center.

"We're still the North Central Kansas Guidance Center, but we have affiliated with the Pawnee Comprehensive Mental Health Center," Allen Davis, executive director of both agencies, said. "The Pawnee Mental Health Center is an umbrella agency for the 10-county area."

Under this plan, the NCKGC will take care of Riley, Geary, Marshall, Clay and Pottawatomie counties, Davis said. The Sunflower Mental Health Center in Concordia, another Pawnee affiliate, will work with the counties of Jewell, Republic, Mitchell, Cloud and Washington.

The two affiliates, along with an inpatient unit in Concordia, make up the Pawnee Center, Davis said.

The NCKGC served the same area with a population base of 120,000 before they became a Pawnee Center affiliate, but a lot of their work was in Riley County, Davis said. Now with satellite offices in Marysville, Wamego, Junction City, and Clay Center, he said they can reach more people.

"We have someone from our adult services staff, child services staff and alcoholic services once each week in every one of the five counties," Davis said.

THE SUNFLOWER Center is setting up similar services in the five other counties. If a service isn't available to people at one of the affiliates they can go to another one, Davis said.

"We've been very limited by our budget by what we could do in the past," he said. "By affiliating with Pawnee, we've been able to expand our services so that new services will soon be available to residents of the entire 10 county area."

A federal grant makes up 50 percent of the Pawnee Center budget, Davis said, with the remaining bulk of the budget reached through patient fees and local taxes.

Davis said there are six new programs under the plan. The Pawnee Center will have a 24-hour emergency service, elderly services, a drug program, a partial hospitalization program, transitional services and an inpatient unit. The elderly services will be at the Sunflower Center and the inpatient unit at St. Joseph Hospital in Concordia.

"If somebody calls after hours in crisis, they'll be able to reach a staff member," Davis said. "Our mental health services will be available around the clock."

After hours people can reach a staff member by phone and if they need to see someone it will be arranged, he said.

THE ELDERLY services are going to be aimed at finding ways to reduce isolation of elderly people living alone and help prepare for retirement.

Davis said the NCKGC soon will have a counselor to get a drug program going because they are aware of the pressing problem involved with drug abuse.

The new partial hospitalization and transitional services are for those people who may need more than a onece-a-week visit to the center. Davis said the transitional program is for people living on their own or in a halfway house and not in the hospital.

The inpatient unit in Concordia is a new service which will be more convenient for people in the 10-county area, Davis said. Before the Pawnee plan went into effect, persons needing hospital care had to travel much farther because the area didn't have any facilities, he said.

Media campaign promotes responsible use of alcohol

A campaign to teach students responsible drinking habits will begin at K-State, sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center.

"This will be an all-media advertising campaign to encourage persons—and particularly students—who drink to drink responsibly," Dr. Robert Sinclair, health center director, said.

The campaign will feature newspaper and radio advertising and video-tape programs.

"Responsible drinking is knowing your own limits — being able to say 'no' to that next drink that would be one too many," according to a prepared statement released by Lafene.

"Encouraging hosts at parties to serve an alternative, non-alcoholic beverage, will be one of our goals," Mike Bradshaw, project director, said.

"First Aid, assertiveness training and other features of the campaign will be made available to campus organizations," Sinclair said.

LAFENE will teach students first aid to help the intoxicated person. An intoxicated person may become depressed, aggressive or could hyperventilate, Bradshaw said.

"These measures could even save a life," Bradshaw said.

Two K-State students will be helping with the program. Phyllis Groth, graduate in journalism will be working with the media, and Camilia Cline, graduate in psychology, will help with research, he said.

This program is being made possible with the assistance of a 12-month grant from the Kansas Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, Alcohol and Drug Abuse Section, Bradshaw said.

The program is being undertaken because misuse of alcohol by college students is rising, he said.

"Nationally, 80 to 85 percent of students drink. It is an increase over what it has been in the past years," Bradshaw said.

Hewett's experience guides pride of wildcat land band

By JANET DAVISON
Staff Writer

His mother wanted him to be a concert pianist. He wanted to be a college band director.

His philosophy about life is based on thoughts of Norman Vincent Peale.

And for the last ten years he has made the "Pride of Wildcat Land" Marching Band run.

His name is Phil Hewett.

Hewett hasn't always been a band director. Before he began teaching in 1957, he was a professional drummer and played in bands for Jack Benny, Doc Severinson, Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra and Skitch Henderson.

"I made most of my living for 16 or 17 years playing all types of professional jobs," Hewett said. "It started when I was pretty young."

HEWETT'S first professional job was in 1949. Paul Whiteman and his band came to Hewett's home town, Fort Worth, on New Year's Eve.

"I had just joined the Musician's Union," Hewett said. "They came to town and needed a drummer who could read music for their New Year's Eve show. Something had happened to their drummer, and they hired me to play."

"He (Whiteman) offered me a job with the band, but I was still in high school and didn't want to quit," Hewett said.

"When you're in a large city there are several people known as 'bookers' or orchestra directors," Hewett said. "I had my own group that ranged from a three piece band to a 30-piece orchestra."

HE SAID these bookers hired their bands out to performers who came to town. That is how he came to play for Benny, Martin, Severinson, Buddy Morrow and others.

"It was usually a one night thing where they came to town, you rehearsed with them and played with them that night," Hewett said.

Hewett toured the United States and Europe with the Navy Band from 1953 until 1957, but says he received most of his professional training and experience in symphony and opera music. His mother wanted him to be a concert pianist.

"I would have liked to have had a career as a professional musician," Hewett said. "But ever since I was five years old I've wanted to be a college band director."

"When I was a small child we used to live one block away from Harvard. My mother always took me down there to watch the band practice and that's when I made up my mind that that's what I wanted to do."

HEWETT'S first job as a band director was in 1958 in "a little bitty town" called Boyd, Texas.

"I had a total of 11 kids in that band and that included two majorettes and a drum major," Hewett said. "It was a town of about 500 and I think they had to count the dogs and chickens to come up with that."

PHIL HEWETT...relaxes in his office, one of the few times his schedule allows him some rest.

His next job was at a high school in Eastland, Texas. He was there for three years and in that time the band grew from 32 members to over 250. He's not sure why.

"I don't know," he said, "I try to work hard. People have asked what my philosophy is. I really had never put anything together."

"When I taught in Pascal High School (his alma mater) in Fort Worth, I was there six years, we had a really super program. I had a hat there that I wore. I wore it during practice and I wore it to contests. I'm not superstitious, but every time I wore it we won."

"The students got the idea to do something to the hat," Hewett said. "We had a band banquet every year, but that year I walked in, thinking it was a banquet I had planned, and the kids had turned it into a tribute to me."

"They had the hat bronzed; I still have it at home, and this (quote by Norman Vincent Peale) is what they put under it:

'Enthusiasm lifts life out of the ordinary, makes it mean something. Play life cool and you may freeze; play it hot, and even if you get burned, you will at least shed warmth over the world.'

"That just about says it for me and that's what I try to do," Hewett said.

"I feel that if I am enthused and work at it and don't take advantage of the student's time and walk in prepared to work, the students will be enthused and prepared to work to do what it takes to get the job done," he said.

HEWETT is not sure when he developed his now-famous wiggle, but thinks it is due to his being a drummer.

"I'm a drummer and I'm used to, as a drummer, having both hands and feet moving all the time and when I get involved in the music I just can't stand still."

"We have a lot of fun talking about it," Hewett said. "A common remark we get on critique sheets at contests is, 'The band is fantastic and you must have a great choreographer.'"

"The people in town here presented me with a plaque last year; it was from the Manhattan Band Boosters, that says 'Fastest Fanny in the West'," he said.

Collectors: Treasure hunters search for another man's junk

One man's junk is another man's treasure. From coins, stamps, pornography to human teeth, people collect. The collections are as varied as the people themselves.

"You never know where you might find something interesting," said Sylvia Leasure, an owner of the Treasure Chest. "Grandpa's barn or Mother's attic are always good places to start."

Leasure says estate sales are good places to look, but they often created a distance problem for the beginner, or for someone who is looking for only one item.

According to Robert Sinnet, psychologist, and director of mental health at Lafene, "People who collect things that are out of the ordinary might be making an effort at uniqueness. Perhaps they would like to become an expert in an area with no competition.

Special Effects

WALTER PRATER is a collector.

He is a collector of teeth. Human teeth, shark teeth, coyote teeth. It makes no difference, Prater says he collects them all.

Prater, a senior in mechanical engineering at the University of Kansas, said he got into collecting teeth through a fascination with nature and his own body.

"There is a sort of permanence about teeth that fascinates me," he said. "The teeth of an animal signify its existence after it's dead and gone."

Some collectibles give the collector a vehicle for creativity. Prater uses the teeth, and his creativity, to design unusual jewelry.

"I didn't really get into it until I started making the teeth into an art form," Prater said.

"I string the teeth and make necklaces out of them. I have my own wisdom teeth and some of my sister's teeth strung on a necklace. I work turquoise and coral into the necklaces, with a feather here and there," he said.

PRATER SAID, "Some dentists were nice enough to clean some teeth and even drill holes in them for me."

However, not all dentists felt the same, he said.

"Most dentists, when they find out what I'm going to use them for, get grossed out and throw them away."

"There's a real taboo about human teeth. It's fine to string an animal's tooth onto a necklace, but mention human teeth and people lose it," Prater said.

There are different qualities of teeth, according to Prater. Older teeth, from an animal which has been dead a long time, are not as desirable as the teeth from an animal which has been dead a short time.

Prater says he has standards.

"I only collect quality teeth," he said. After a period of time, the teeth will start to decompose if they are not treated.

"I treat them with glycerin first, then I give them a coat of clear fingernail polish. If I just let them go without treating them, they would lose all their moisture and begin to flake," he said. "This way they will last forever."

TEETH CAN be found anywhere, according to Prater.

"I find lots of them when I am hiking. I found a coyote skull, and managed to salvage some of its teeth," he said. "I have some donkey teeth stashed away in a jar somewhere. A friend gave them to me."

Prater's favorite tooth was given to him by a man in Brazil. The man said it was the tooth of a black panther.

"It is really beautiful. It is directly involved with the life of the animal," Prater said. "It shows the aggressive nature of the animal. It is one of the canine teeth."

Feathers are a subject of Prater's interest. He collects feathers, and works them into his necklace designs.

"If I see a freshly killed bird on the highway, I'll stop and start plucking," Prater said.

Prater has feathers from many species of birds including duck, pheasant, blue jay, owl, meadowlark, parrot and even an eagle feather a friend sent him from Alaska. Prater maintains he is a humanitarian. "I never killed an animal for its teeth or feathers."

His high standards are carried over in his feather collecting. "I treat the feathers with an organic chemical

There is a sort of a permanence about teeth that fascinates me.

to get rid of any lice or anything else that might be on them."

He contends he takes his collection seriously. "I wouldn't collect fingernails or anything like that. They wouldn't last very long anyway."

Not everyone collects teeth. The collections are as varied as the people collecting them.

"PEOPLE FROM all walks of life are collectors," Leasure said. "It doesn't matter how old or how rich someone is, there is always something for them to collect. We have kids who can't reach the counter tops in here collecting comic books and baseball cards," she said.

Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism, collects and posts comic strips on the door of her office for the fun of it.

"The don't get posted if they aren't relevant to journalism, communication, education, or the status of women, Oukrop said.

Oukrop got started collecting comic strips about five years ago, when a student gave her one. Her collection comes from newspapers, children's books and occasionally a magazine cartoon.

"I like their subtlety," Oukrop said of her favorite strips. Among them are "Doodlesbury," "Peanuts" and "B.C."

Oukrop is not alone in her interest in comic strips. It is common to see people standing in front of Oukrop's door reading the strips.

"I KNOW THE readership (on the door) is high," Oukrop said. "A lot of times, I have to say, 'Excuse me,' to get through my own door. Oddly enough, they apologize...Why do they think I post them?"

Many people collect for value. Pride of ownership, they say is involved in this type of collecting.

"It is like when a guy thinks so much of his car, that when it gets hit, it is like he got hit, and not the car," Sinnet said.

Marcille Wingfield, of Greensburg, has collected music boxes since she was five years old, when she won one in a Sunday School contest.

Wingfield estimates the value of her collection at $4,000. The most expensive music box she owns is a Fujii, from Japan. It has two hundred small discs that play different tunes, and Wingfield estimates its value at $450.

"They are all worth a million to me, no matter what the monetary value is," she said.

Wingfield takes her 147 music boxes around the state and gives presentations to various organizations. She got started lecturing in 1976, when a friend talked her into showing her collection to her women's club. In February, Wingfield will give her 100th presentation in Macksville.

"I try to get people more interested and excited about their own hobbies, and make them more aware of music boxes," she said.

Wingfield tells a story with everyone of her music boxes, including one she got in Wakeeney.

"I try to get people more interested and excited about their own hobbies, and make them more aware of music boxes," she said.

Wingfield tells a story with every one of her music boxes, including one she got in Wakeeney.

"I had always wondered how the town of Wakeeney got its name," she said. "I did some research and found that the town was founded by two men, one named Warren, the other named Kenny. I just had to get a music box from Wakeeney."

Her favorite music boxes include a small silver bucket that plays "We've Only Just Begun." Another favorite of Wingfield's is a cigarette lighter which plays "Smoke Get's in Your Eyes."

Most of Wingfield's music boxes were given to her by family or friends, or the groups she has spoke to. Her 14-year-old son gave her a silver candlestick which plays the Jewish Anniversary Waltz.

Her oldest music box has been in her family since 1903. Her family won a box from a department store in Great Bend for being one of the largest families to move into the area in a covered wagon.

The fact that a type of collecting may be illegal might give the collector an exciting taste of "forbidden fruit."

ONE MANHATTAN resident collects and takes his own pornographic pictures. He wished to remain unidentified.

"I collect them because I like to look at them," he said. "If I took them myself, it brings back memories of past girls."

According to the collector, he gets his pictures through special ads he has heard about through his friends.

I look for girls that will pose.

I just prefer that they do.

-Pornography collector

"I get some on the Missouri side of Kansas City, and I take some myself."

"I look for girls that will pose," the pornography collector said. "If my dates are opposed, I don't make a big deal out of it. I just prefer that they do."

He began collecting pornographic pictures when he was nineteen.

"After I had the money, the influence of my friends got me into it," he said. "I guess I always had it in the back of my mind."

He says he only collects and takes pornographic photographs. Right now, the other aspects of pornography are too expensive for him.

THE FACT that his hobby is illegal he says makes it more exciting.

"It is definitely more fun because it's illegal," he said. "Isn't everything more fun when it's illegal?"

Sinnet said some other possible reasons why people collect. "Collecting could be a vehicle for relationships. It would be easy to relate to people who collect the same thing."

Sinnet said people could be collecting as means for security.

"There are cases where it could satisfy a need for completion; like a complete collection of Playboys, for instance," he said.

Sinnet said collecting could become a substitute for human relationships. This is when a person spends more time with his collection than with people.

"They wouldn't have to worry about the conflicts that go with human relationships."

Ballet troupe graces McCain Auditorium with a masterful style

By ALLISON ERKELENS
Arts Editor

The Royal Winnipeg ballet of Canada blessed McCain Auditorium Sunday night with an evening of modern dance and classical ballet.

Performing before a near-sellout crowd, the group's repertoire included dance styles from many major choreographers, including John Neumier, Norbert Vesak and George Balanchine.

The group's first dance, entitled "Festival," was choreographed by Oscar Araiz. Araiz, who stresses inventive works based in classical ballet, was introduced into North America by the company in 1974 after it visited his home country, Argentina.

Featuring a series of chorus line leaps, "Festival" filled the stage with a moving, musical rainbow. The colorful costumes, all produced in the shops of the Royal Winnipeg ballet under the supervision of Doreen Macdonald, added greatly to the energetic number.

"Adagietto," another creation in the Araiz mode of dance, utilized more intimate, gentle movement.

CHOREOGRAPHED to the fourth movement of the Symphony No. 5 by Gustav Mahler, "Adagietto," conjured up images of tenderness as dancers Marina Egelvsky and Salvatore Aiello performed inter-twining, contortionistic movements to the lovely score.

The third of the Araiz pieces capitalized on the confessions of women in an intimate atmosphere.

Entitled, "Women," this number revealed the intricacies and indelicacies of the female. Garbed in frilly unmentionables, Bonnie Wyckoff, Eva Christiansen, Sheri Cook, Marina Egelvsky and Margaret Slota performed with great depth and feeling.

The close range of the motion in this dance could often make a more conservative audience a bit uncomfortable, but the McCain crowd seemed to react favorably to the meaning of the piece, greeting it with a partial standing ovation.

TURNING towards more traditional styles, Balanchine's "Glinka Pas se Trois," to the music of Mikhail Glinka, was well represented by members of the ballet troupe.

The piece, incorporating dance steps down to the 16th note as is Balanchine's style, combined an energetic attack at dance and the graceful movements of women on full point.

In a gala finale, the company presented "Rodeo," a humorous rendition of love and life on the ranches of the American Southwest.

Choreographed to a musical score written by Aaron Copeland, Agnes de Mille captured the spirit and festivities common to a life not too far removed from Kansas reality.

THE ENTIRE company put their best toe shoe forward to bring forth a most enjoyable viewing experience.

Impressive doesn't quite capture the skill involved in putting together such an endeavor.

Tractor parades help in Congress

Second District Congresswoman Martha Keys, (D.-Manhattan), told a group of about 50 Manhattan residents Saturday that the recent migration of farmers to Washington "made a great deal of progress" in informing legislators of the problems facing the farmers.

In a town meeting at the City Auditorium, Keys said "although we can't pass laws overnight, the concern (shown by the farmers) should help in generating better prices."

"I think we'll see some improvement in sealed storage, a slightly increased loan rate and a moratorium on loans" Keys said. "I think the farmers went away with a better understanding of other problems in the country."

KEYS also used the meeting to level a blast at President Carter because of the recent firing of U.S. Attorney David Marston of Philadelphia. Marston, a Republican, was investigating alleged corruption by two Pennsylvania Democrats.

"Replacement of U.S. attorneys appointed by a previous administration is customary," she said. "But in this case, it was a mistake because of the appearance."

"I have no doubt when the decision was made (to fire Marston), it was not known the investigation had been started."

KEYS also defended her proposal to provide a cash program instead of food stamps for those on welfare.

Keys said she favored a single system for welfare that would eliminate separate rules for food stamps, Social Security income and aid to dependent children.

"Our welfare laws are very bad," Keys said. "They are anti-work and anti-family. My proposal says that a person would have to work if they were able-bodied and that the cash would allow them to buy their own food."

Keys was then asked if the cash payments would not be used to purchase items other than food.

"Food stamps are currency that can be bartered and these problems (improper use of food money) would have to be solved in other ways with the social worker," Keys said.

Keys also said that she strongly supported the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) and that she was "proud that Kansas was the sixth state to ratify."

"ERA is necessary because we still have legal discrimination because of sex," she said. She added that federal and state income tax laws provide no recognition of joint ownerships and a woman's contribution in the home is unrecognized.

Construction moratorium not likely

By NANCY HORST
Staff Writer

Efforts in the Kansas Legislature to halt construction of state buildings, including university construction, is meeting opposition that may dissolve any cause for concern.

The section of the bill directed specifically at universities' justifies the moratorium because of an anticipated decrease in enrollments and no pressing needs which require new construction.

But Paul Young, vice president for facilities at K-State, isn't sure those assumptions should be accepted. Although Young said he preferred to not give his opinion on the necessity of the bill while action is pending in the legislature, he is concerned with the effects the bill could have on K-State construction if it is passed.

THE BILL makes the moratorium from July 1, 1978, to July 1, 1980, although those dates could be changed by amendment.

"That bill would effect the student recreation complex and the plant science building," Young said. "I don't see how either project could be contracted prior to July 1."

Young added that both projects are in the final planning stages, but the process is long and complex before actual contracting is done.

Young said the general classroom building would not be affected since contracting for the project is scheduled for this spring.

Young also challenged the assumption that the university has enough space.

"As of last fall, we had a deficit at K-State of over 900,000 square feet," he said. "After the plant science and general classroom buildings, we'll still have a deficit of over 400,000 square feet."

Concerning the assumption that enrollments are leveling off and will not increase in the near future,

'It's a silly bill, proposed in a silly season by silly people and it has a silly chance..'

Young was skeptical about the idea.

"A lot of prophecies on enrollment are unfulfilled," Young said, referring to the continued increase in enrollment at K-State despite the projections that enrollment is decreasing.

YOUNG ADDED that his own belief is the University will continue to see an increase in enrollment but he had no way to prove it.

Sen. Arnold Berman (D-Lawrence) and Sen. Jack Steinegar (D-Kansas City, Kans.), sponsors of the bill, said their intention was to address the problems with the state architect's office and state buildings in the last year.

"It was intended fundamentally to permit a reorganization of our state building department," Berman said.

The office is "having a lot of problems" and this will give them time to "get their act together," he said.

Steinegar agreed and said the legislature is upset over the finding of the investigation done last fall which documented several faulty buildings across the state including several at K-State.

But both senators said the two-year moratorium in the bill was just a starting point and probably the administration of the state offices.

SEN. Donn Everett (R-Manhattan) is not impressed with the bill, regardless of its intentions.

"It's a silly bill proposed in a silly season by silly people and it has a silly chance," Everett said. "It doesn't address the problem properly. It has the same chance of passing as human rights in Uganda."

Everett said the concern is legitimate but it should be attacked through architectural supervision and the contract process.

Sen. Wint Winter (R-Ottawa), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, where the bill is awaiting action, also was not impressed with the bill calling it a "broad indictment."

IDLE TOOLS, NOT HANDS... The conservatory, which was moved from its location last summer, is being reconstructed on a site at Denison Ave. The project will preserve a piece of K-State history.

Conservatory settles at new home soon

By BECKY DOUDICAN
Collegian Reporter

The relocation of the conservatory, which was scheduled to be finished by November 1 of last year, should be complete in six weeks if weather conditions are favorable.

Two heaters for the building haven't been delivered resulting in the delay, according to Irwine Duncan, maintenance carpenter for the physical plant. There is also more work to be done around the outside of the conservatory.

The rebuilding of the conservatory involved moving it from near Dickens Hall to a location by the old dairy barn where the new horticulture complex will be located.

The dairy barn will be a multi-department work area according to Richard Mattson of the horticulture department including the department of horticulture, agronomy, plant pathology and entomology. The new complex will also include a garden along Denison Avenue and several research greenhouses.

A new general classroom and office building will be built on the old conservatory site.

The conservatory was moved in three sections by a private contractor. The physical plant workers then worked on the foundation. During the move only two panes of glass were broken but all of the glass was replaced because of its worn condition.

Mattson said that there are going to be "A lot of unique changes" in the conservatory. Those changes include a rock pool and no raised platforms.

"There will be very few potted plants on display," Mattson said. "Almost all of them will be planted in the soil along the walkways."

Engineering dean forces magazine issue reprinted

By TIM HORAN
Staff Writer

The holiday issue of the K-State Engineer had to be printed twice because Dean Donald Rathbone said the lead editorial was inaccurate and gave a negative view of the college.

Along with the editorial, which was about the effects of the student-teacher ratio, was an article about the Rehabilitation Act of 1973. The act, which was the subject of the article, provided that there will be "no discrimination against qualified handicapped individuals," and its relationship to K-State buildings.

Rathbone said for the first time he took the privilege of being publisher of the magazine and decided the editorial and the article should be rewritten. The articles weren't rewritten but were substituted by other articles.

THE MAGAZINE is funded in part by advertising, $7,028, and student funds, $1,350, and is distributed at the K-State campus, high schools and other colleges. It is published six times a year.

The first edition of the holiday issue was distributed during final week last semester through the College of Engineering. Rathbone said when he read the issue the first piece he read was the editorial. He then decided to pick up the issues and have the magazine reprinted. The new edition, which cost about $500, was distributed last week.

"The editorial was wrong," Rathbone said. "I want facts to be right."

The editorial implied that the college had classes with as many as 50 students. It also said, "In fall 1973, the student enrollment in the College of Engineering was 946 and the number of faculty employed was 151. This fall, the number of students enrolled was 1,842 and the number of faculty fired is 140. This means that our much lauded low student-teacher ratio has grown from 6.5 to 13.2... The above figures are interesting but they don't tell about the frustration students feel when our classes are too large for our instructors to spend adequate time on or that our advisers have too many other responsibilities to take time to get to know us personally or that we are encountering closed classes more often than we should... We deserve better."

RATHBONE said compared to other schools, K-State has one of the best student-teacher ratios in the country. A computer printout for the spring semester revealed the average engineering class size to range from 15 to 30. The largest class has 40 students and the smallest has seven.

The number of teachers, as stated in the editorial, was wrong. Rathbone said the author must have included in that figure extension workers and others because the college actually had fewer teachers. He also said that 11 teachers were added to the engineering staff last semester.

"That's a positive error in our favor but I want credibility to go along with them (figures)," Rathbone said.

"I try to be accurate," he said. "And don't forget I'm trying to build a good College of Engineering and I think we have a good one. The numbers were wrong, the direction was wrong, the size of the classes was wrong (see DEANS, p.2)

Egypt, Israel to resurrect Sinai negotiations in Cairo

JERUSALEM (AP)—Egyptian-Israeli military negotiations on the future of the occupied Sinai peninsula will resume Tuesday night in Cairo, spokesmen in Jerusalem and Cairo announced Monday.

Israel said Defense Minister Ezer Weizman and his negotiating team will leave for Cairo earlier that day.

Word of the resumption came as U.S. mediator Alfred Atherton hand-carried an Israeli proposal for a declaration on overall peace principles to Cairo after a final meeting Monday morning with Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan in Jerusalem.

THE assistant secretary of state helped write the draft in a week of talks with Israeli leaders. Talking to reporters in Cairo, he said those negotiations "advanced matters a bit" but declined to go beyond that statement before meeting Egyptian officials.

Weizman and his Egyptian counterpart Mohamed Abdel Ghany Gamassy recessed their military talks Jan. 13 in deadlock over the future of the 20 Jewish settlements established by Israel on the northern and southern edges of the Sinai Peninsula.

Parallel political negotiations snagged the following week when Egyptian President Anwar Sadat recalled his foreign minister from Jerusalem. At the urging of President Carter, Sadat did not halt the military talks, but Israel delayed sending Weizman back to the Egyptian capital until Egypt tempered a series of anti-Israeli attacks in the Cairo press.

OFFICIALS in Jerusalem say the formula worked out between Israel and the United States on the critical Palestinian question may clear the way to complete Egyptian-Israeli peace principles.

"Israel has gone a long way" in making concessions, said one official who asked not to be identified. "We think it can be accepted by Egypt."

Agreement with Egypt on the principles would constitute a high point in the 11-week old Israeli-Egyptian search for peace and could spark resumption of political negotiations in Jerusalem.

Some officials speculated Sadat may hold up his reply until after he meets with President Carter this weekend at Carter's Camp David retreat in Maryland in hopes Carter he can bargain for a better deal.

In Moscow, the Soviet news agency Tass criticized the Sadat trip saying it "camouflaged plans for a separate deal with Israel...to the detriment of the Arabs' vital interests."

THE ISRAELIS refused to discuss details of their proposals. But some elements have emerged in private conversations with government sources.

These sources say the Palestinian clause endorses the right of the Palestinians to "participate in the determination of their future." The phrase is a U.S. compromise bridging Egypt's demand for Palestinian self-determination and Israel's rejection of a Palestinian state.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin has said the overall declaration contains seven principles, but only two caused problems.

Sources said the second troublesome clause focuses on Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands in captured in 1967.

Manager says 'America' will play at K-State

The manager for the rock group "America" confirmed Monday the group would perform at K-State March 3. The manager said he wasn't positive, but thought the group would perform one show at Ahearn Field House.

The manager for Jackson Browne also confirmed he was negotiating with the Union Program Council (UPC) for a concert which would probably be the third week of March.

Irene Parsons, of the UPC concerts committee, said contracts hadn't been signed and she didn't want to announce anything until they were.

Parsons said UPC was negotiating with Browne but said the concert would probably be in April.

Dean grabs issue, pulls two stories and the student ratio was misleading."

For those reasons Rathbone said it was worth the effort and money to reprint the issue.

Brenda Laakso, last semester's editor, said she was upset because she wasn't notified of the incident and that the dean "didn't make it clear enough to the students who worked for the magazine that it was his magazine."

"I think the students who write the magazine should know that controversial matter might not be published," she said.

SHE ALSO said the reason the articles were taken out of the issue was because the dean didn't want them printed.

"If there were any inaccuracies it was from the dean's point of view," she said.

"I have never been told to watch what I write," she said, adding that she'd worked for the publication for two and one-half years.

Rathbone said the second article taken out of the issue was an afterthought. He said it wouldn't have been the cause of the reprinting of the issue but added that some parts of it also were incorrect. He said there were several new constructions and proposed constructions which outdated the article.

For example, Seaton Hall now has a ramp and a restroom with enlarged stalls to accommodate persons confined to a wheelchair. An elevator is planned for Ward Hall, he said.

"Durland Hall has no trouble with the handicapped," he said.

The article quoted Ralph Hicks, a civil engineer employed by the physical plant. It said, "Hicks stated that even Durland Hall, one of the newer buildings on campus, does not conform with all the standards for accessibility."

Terry Applegate, author of the article, said he didn't feel the article was inaccurate. He hadn't been contacted by the dean about the article nor did he realize that it had been dropped.

"It wasn't the most complimentary article in the world but then it wasn't written with malice," he said.

Laakso said she had read the article and felt it was a very general article. She said she thought the article was too general to be inaccurate.

Rathbone added that the article was accompanied by a photograph of a stairway in Durland Hall. He thought the picture was misleading because all floors of the hall were accessible by elevator.

Vaccinations safe; Russian flu coming

WASHINGTON (AP)—The risks of dying from influenza are 1,000 times greater than the risks of dying from vaccination, a government health official said Monday.

Dr. William Foege, director of the Center for Disease Control (CDC), made the assertion to a panel of experts considering whether to recommend a mass inoculation campaign against the Russian flu. The new flu strain broke out in Cheyenne, Wyo., recently and is expected to spread later this winter or next winter.

Foege sought to allay the fears raised by the problem-plagued swine flu inoculation campaign of 1976.

Although considered relatively mild, the Russian flu has spread rapidly among children in the Soviet Union and elsewhere in Europe and Asia. It struck more than 30 percent of children 14 and younger in Leningrad in recent weeks, according to reports relayed by U.S. health researchers who visited Moscow last week.

Carter blasts satellites

WASHINGTON—President Carter promised Monday to ask the Soviet Union not to send up any more atomic satellites like the one that fell on Canada and said "we would be glad to forego the deployment of any such satellites altogether."

Calling for more rigid precautions among all nations, the president said the United States and the Soviet Union should try to develop a "sure-fire" safety system to keep such nuclearpower satellites from falling to earth or into the atmosphere.

"If we cannot evolve those failsafe methods," Carter said, "then I think there ought to be a total prohibition against earth orbiting satellites. I would favor at this moment an agreement with the Soviets to prohibit earth orbiting satellites with atomic or radiation material in them."

Carter spoke at a nationally televised news conference, his second this year. He pledged to pursue the "failsafe" system and the atomic-satellite ban with the Soviet Union. Carter said the Soviets had told him their satellite was designed to be destroyed during its fall and that it would not explode.

Trade deficit soars

WASHINGTON—The nation's trade deficit soared to a record $26.7 billion last year, the government reported Monday, and a top administration official predicted a deficit nearly as large this year.

Imports of costly foreign oil were a major cause of the 1977 deficit, draining $42.1 billion from American banks and pocketbooks, an increase of $10 billion from a year earlier.

The huge trade deficit has been a chief reason for the decline of the dollar on world money markets in the past year. If the deficit continues as predicted, further declines in the dollar appear likely in 1978.

Both imports and exports set new highs during 1977, although imports grew much faster. The Commerce Department said imports of all goods totalled $146.8 billion, a 22 percent increase, while exports totalled $120.1 billion, a five percent advance from 1976.

Rhodesia rejects settlement

RABAT, Malta—The United States and Britain failed to persuade black guerrilla leaders Monday to abandon their bloody five-year war against Rhodesia's white government and accept a plan for a peaceful settlement leading to black majority rule.

U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young and British Foreign Secretary David Owen said that the talks with Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo—co-leaders of the militant Patriotic Front—yielded no agreements on major issues.

"The divisions are on important issues," Young told reporters after emerging from a two-hour morning conference on this Mediterranean island nation. The talks will continue today.

Adolescent sex up

NEW YORK—A nationwide report on adolescent sex shows a one-third increase between 1971 to 1976 in both premarital sexual activity and pregnancy among girls 15 to 19 years old.

However, the authors of the report said that learning about the dimensions of sexual behavior among female teen-agers does not help to explain that behavior.

"Far more study is required before we can hope to explain and understand the sexual and reproductive behavior of young Americans," they concluded.

Water leak in King will cost thousands Bonebrake says

Damage from a water leak in King Hall will probably cost thousands of dollars to repair, according to Case Bonebrake, director of the Physical Plant.

"Water is appearing at the line between the floor and wall on the west side of the basement lecture hall," Bonebrake said.

It isn't a flooding condition, according to Bonebrake, but temporary repairs will be needed.

The source of the water hasn't been identified, Bonebrake said, but city water couldn't be the problem because of a lack of chlorine. Ground water from precipitation has had correction repairs in the past, Bonebrake said, and this should have been prevented.

"It is possible that there has been a crack of the waterproofing membrane in the building due to a shifting of settling of King Hall," he said.

Bonebrake confirmed that a temporary "duckwalk" had been constructed. He said this would keep the water from affecting ordinary traffic.

"We cannot investigate the situation properly or even plan on permanent repairs because of frozen ground at the present time," Bonebrake said.

But an expensive estimate for permanent repair is in sight, he said.

Parking proposals pondered

It is a relief to find that the parking problem on K-State campus isn't really as bad as we thought.

This revelation was handed down recently by the K-State Student Senate Task Force on Traffic and Parking.

A recent Task Force report quotes a survey conducted by Vice President for University Facilities Paul Young saying that the West Stadium parking area consistently had more than 100 vacant parking spaces during regular parking hours.

The survey also said that quite often there were more than 200 vacant spaces.

SO A MAJOR problem has been isolated: the students can't find the spaces (or don't know the parking lot exists).

"We must communicate to the students that those parking spots are available," said Student Body President Terry Matlack.

This seems to be a reasonable plan, if indeed there are available spaces in the parking lot during times when they are needed.

A five block permit ban is also under consideration by the Task Force.

A large number of students living within a five block area of campus who are now driving may be required to walk in.

Then there is the problem of storing cars that belong to dorm residents.

The Task Force supports the idea of building a parking lot behind Weber Hall (as recommended by the University Traffic and Parking Committee).

THE PROPOSED lot would hold 425 cars and cost an estimated $39,000.

The concept of building additional parking lots is logical, but consideration should be given to the multi-level parking garage, since horizontal building space on campus is of great scarcity, while vertical building space is quite plentiful.

Since the main drawback to this plan is the great cost, efforts should be made to seek out new sources of funding for such a project.

In the meantime, the Student Senate Task Force on Traffic and Parking should continue to generate more imaginative and feasible proposals.

The creativity displayed in their ideas so far is quite encouraging.

Legislative lullabies

As political issues grow more complex and the government reaches further and further into peoples' pockets and homes, the need for a responsive and intelligent government increases.

Unfortunately, this is not always the case.

Americans should be proud to live in a country where participatory democracy is the general rule of business if the public will use the power available through the constitution.

The most powerful tool available to the public is the vote and, if organized well, it can be effective. But too often people have been slighted in some way and grow discouraged and just give up.

I'm afraid many Kansans have given up with the vote and it's apparent by the quality of some of the legislators representing us in Topeka.

BEING AN election year, now is a good time to observe the legislature and see if it's doing its job.

As a first-time observer of the Kansas Legislature in action last week, I was not only shocked at the quality of some of the legislators, but also I was appalled at the conduct displayed in public by some of these men and women.

Not intending to criticize every senator and representative in the statehouse—there are some sharp, responsive men and women gracing those halls. It is these people who make it apparent that the election process does work if used to its fullest potential.

But one cannot overlook the giggling, sleeping, book-reading committee members who must ask every few minutes just what is being voted on.

THE BEST example of such conduct occurred in a committee meeting to take action on three bills which could have quite an impact in Manhattan. The bills pertained to liquor—the sacred cow of college students.

Not to criticize those representatives who were aware of what was going on and had obviously done their homework, I will omit the name of the committee.

But in the course of the activity, two members of the committee were sleeping, two members were passing a book back and forth in a fashion similar to a sixth grader reading his first explicit sex scene and several people were asking, "What are we voting on?"

After nearly an hour of this circus, my colleague and I had to walk out in disgust.

It is no wonder that the public becomes discouraged with representative government and simply gives up. But it is just as easily the best reason to become interested in who is running the lives of millions of people.

THE PUBLIC has a right and an obligation to be critical of the people representing us in government. The legislative activity is open to the public's discretion as a way to keep legislators on their toes.

The Kansas Legislature apparently has had little public attention other than the press because some of these people are definitely not on their toes.

The best cure for such a disease is to get the ineffective people out of office. The public cannot know who to shaft without observing their work and keeping up on campaigns.

Get to know people campaigning to represent you in government. Pin them down on issues which effect your lives and your bank account.

Only the public can make this country and this state the best of representative democracy.

Letters to the editor

Greeks criticized, imitated

Editor,

In regard to the letter to the editor which appeared in the Collegian Monday, Jan. 30, 1978 entitled, "Greeks disrupt fans in Ahearn," I feel this headline was unfair to all Greeks on campus.

The article concerned the acts of a few members of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity. It didn't refer to other Greek houses. Then why was the entire Greek system given the blame for the exploits of a few Sig Eps?

I have been to several of the basketball games this year and I know many fans become overexcited or rowdy, dorm residents as well as Greeks.

Then why is a Greek house singled out to take the blame?

I feel that the letter written by David Jarvis in the Monday Collegian and its headline is a prime example of the poor publicity that is always given to Greeks by the Collegian and Royal Purple.

During Greek Week, last year, the only publicity given Greeks was a small picture with a caption below it. However, during "Spring Fling" (a feeble attempt by the residence halls to have their own "Greek Week"), hardly a day passed without an article on the big event: Spring Fling.

Greek housing makes up a substantial percentage of the campus population and deserve better publicity. Residence halls have their Spring Fling, floor function, and floor meetings and elections in an attempt to be like Greeks.

I seems to me that if so many groups want to be like Greeks, then there has to be something good about the Greek system.

Kramer window view nicer through energy-saving plan

New windows installed in Kramer Food Center will cut down utility costs and make seating near windows in Kramer more comfortable.

New thermo-pane windows are being installed to replace single-paned windows which didn't fit well, according to Thomas Frith, director of housing.

Frith said people could not sit by a window at the food center because cold air leaked through.

Jean Riggs, associate director of housing, said the purposes of this project are to make Kramer Food Center comfortable and to conserve energy.

"We started thinking about this project three years ago," Riggs said. "This is the first time it has been warm in there—we've had to turn the thermostats down."

RIGGS SAID the new windows are half the size of the old windows. Insulated panels are being installed to fill in the space, she said.

"The cost of the windows has doubled since we started planning them three years ago," Riggs said.

Each of the new windows cost $3,000. However, $2,000 will be saved on heating and $1,000 to $1,200 will be saved on air conditioning, she said.

"Our cooling is one of our big costs because of the heat from the kitchen," Riggs said. "We figure these windows will pay themselves off in a few years."

The new windows are funded through capital repair and replacement funds, Riggs said.

Governor Bennett and the Board of Regents has instructed the Department of Housing to conserve energy, Frith said.

"Utilities cost more money than they should," Frith said. "At the time these buildings were constructed, energy wasn't a primary factor."

When the project was started, comfort was the main purpose, Riggs said.

"Kids could not sit by the windows in the winter," Riggs said. "Now we can use that space."

Two students bound for Washington to attend National Prayer Breakfast

Two K-State students will be leaving today for a prayer breakfast with President Jimmy Carter on Thursday.

Rick Keating, senior in business administration and Rod Staats, senior in pre-medicine, will attend the 1978 National Prayer Breakfast beginning at 8:00 a.m. Thursday at the Washington Hilton Hotel.

"For over 25 years now the President, members of the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, and other responsible members throughout the nation have met at an annual breakfast for prayer and discussion in the spirit of Jesus Christ," Keating said.

"This has been held near the date of the opening session of Congress and over the years has come to be referred to as the National Prayer Breakfast," he said.

"Seminars on related topics, such as 'Spiritual attitudes throughout the U.S.,' will follow the breakfast," Keating said.

PRESIDENT CARTER will attend only the breakfast, according to Staats.

The Kansas representatives were asked to attend the non-denominational breakfast by their Sunday school teacher, Dick Dean, of Liberal. Dean had previously attended a presidential prayer breakfast.

"About 50 students in the nation will attend," Staats said.

Keating said most people are sent invitations to the breakfast after being cleared by the coordinator of the breakfast.

"This will be a good opportunity," Keating said. "We'll get to look at the national opinions with a little different perspective than what the news media presents."

THE K-STATE students will return to Manhattan on Sunday.

"We hope to do some sight-seeing in Washington before we come back," Staats said.

"I'm grateful to God for giving me this privilege to serve him in this way," Keating said.

Accompanying Keating and Staats is Karry Binford, a former K-State student now attending Wichita State in pre-nursing.

Facilities to relocate in veterinary hospital

Dykstra Veterinary Hospital will take on a new use next fall when the Department of Facilities moves its offices into the building.

Facilities will take over the structure after the veterinary hospital is moved into the new Clinical Sciences building this summer.

"We are scattered out all over the place," said Paul Young, vice president for facilities. "We want to get everybody into two locations in order to improve the work flow and day to day efficiency of the department," he said.

Young said by moving the staff out of the temporary buildings and Anderson Hall they will be able to house the department in just two buildings—the Power Plant and Dykstra.

The department's maintenance vehicles will be moved to Dykstra to allow for more parking space in the lot northwest of the Power Plant.

New air conditioning units for the Power Plant are planned for space vacated by facilities staff north of the Power Plant, he said.

Young said the Department of Facilities will do some renovating of Dykstra after it is vacated next summer. A request from K-State for an appropriation of $276,320 will be forwarded to the Kansas Legislature, he said, to meet a variety of codes when they renovate.

Toss out the old pet rock—hermit crabs are the rage

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

An aquarium.

Not very interesting, really, just some rocks, shells and a piece of popcorn inside a glass box—but there is something else there. Very slowly, one of the shells begins to move. Inside the shell is the newest fad in pets since the pet rock, a hermit crab.

Hermit crabs are small marine animals that use empty shells as their homes. The thin cuticle on the crab's abdomen makes a protective home a necessity. Because of their small size, and the minimum amount of care they require, crabs can make good pets.

Jim Griffin, a resident of Haymaker Hall, said he received his two crabs, Mark and Homer, as a Christmas gift. Mark was the larger of the two crabs, "about the size of a silver dollar," he said.

"Hermit crabs live for about 15 years and will eat just about anything," Griffin said. He feeds Mark and Homer every two days and gives them fresh water daily.

"I've got some crab food, but I also feed them Fritos, popcorn and pizza," he said.

SCOTT BERGHAUS, also a resident of Haymaker, said his crab, Neva, cost about $3 and loves popcorn. Berghaus said there are several pet crabs at Haymaker and sometimes, "we get the crabs out and have races on the floor. The crabs won't fight, but sometimes they'll show each other who is boss."

Rob Fleming, a member of Acacia fraternity, said his crabs, Hubert and Hugo, are molting.

"Molting is when the crabs lose their skin," Fleming explained. "The crabs will bury themselves under the rocks in the aquarium and stay there for two or three weeks until they're through molting."

"Crabs molt every year," Fleming said. "Sometimes the crabs will outgrow their shells, so they just move into another one that is larger."

City considers closing one block of Houston Street

A proposal by Manhattan's Board of Education to permanently close the block of Houston Street between Ninth and Tenth Streets is being considered by the Manhattan city commissioners.

The project will be considered at the February 7 city commission meeting, said James Benjamin, Unified School District 383 superintendent.

"A reason for closing the street would be to allow for building expansion to bring the school closer to the street," Benjamin said.

"Another reason would be for school safety," he said.

"The street is already closed every school day from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. but with it closed off permanently, students could cross from the main building to the gym at all hours without worrying about traffic," Benjamin said.

He said the proposal has been under consideration for 30 years, and believes "it would be very desirable if we were allowed to go ahead with our plans."

"We (the city), will also re-do traffic signs around the area," Bruce McCallum, city engineer, said.

"The board of education will be paying for landscaping and draining fireplugs that would be required if the street were closed," McCallum said.

"The entire cost of the development would be around $120,000," he said.

The block by the school would be landscaped to become a courtyard, Benjamin said. He said a new woodshop building and an elevator for the handicapped also would be built.

"The people around the area who are used to having the street blocked off, have not expressed any comment on the proposed closing and development project on Houston Street," McCallum said.

Ramada Inn to become K-State property in 2001

By the year 2001, the University Ramada Inn, at 17th and Anderson, will belong to the Kansas State University Endowment Association.

The motel, which is on land owned by the association, was built in 1968 under a 33-year lease with the association.

The Endowment Association entered into the agreement in response to concern over the lack of convention facilities during the 1960s, according to Larry Weigel, associate director of the association.

The association bought the land on which the motel stands, and then leased it to University Facilities, Inc., the builder of the motel.

UNDER THE terms of the contract, "the building will be deeded to the Kansas State University Endowment Association after 33 years."

"Approximately in the year 2000 the building will be owned by the Endowment Association," Weigel said.

The Ramada pays rent to the Endowment Association of six percent per year of the net original cost of the land, Weigel said.

The contract provides at the beginning of the thirteenth of the 33 years, the association shall receive five percent ownership of the motel.

Scholarship applications deadline near

By LYNN BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

Robert is a junior at K-State. His father's income is too high for Robert to receive a federal grant but because there are eight children in the family, it is hard for Robert's father to pay for his schooling.

Robert's situation may seem hopeless, but there is an alternative.

Student Financial Assistance (SFA) awards about 3,000 scholarships a year, according to Jim Upham, SFA associate director.

Any K-State student is eligible to apply for these scholarships, Upham said.

TO APPLY, a student must pick up an ACT family financial statement from the SFA office in Fairchild Hall. This should be filled out along with a scholarship application and returned to Fairchild, Upham said.

The applications should be returned by Feb. 15 to insure full consideration, Mike Novak, SFA director, said.

"We are trying to speed up the notification time this year," Novak said, "but a student who delays returning his application until after Feb. 15 will be too late to be considered for the scholarships awarded first."

SFA uses the scholarship application along with information from admissions and records pertaining to a student's hometown and background to screen applicants for the different scholarships, Upham said.

SCHOLARSHIPS available are listed in the University Bulletin under their respective colleges, Upham said. Those not pertaining to any particular college are listed under miscellaneous, he said.

Each scholarship application received is processed by the general scholarship committee.

The procedure following computer sorting varies according to specifications for each scholarship, Novak said.

Some scholarships specify that the recipient is to be named by a particular college. These scholarships are given to committees chosen by the particular colleges.

THE COMMITTEES receive a list of qualifications for the scholarship and a list of students who have been found eligible for the scholarship by the general scholarship committee, he said.

Recipients chosen by the committees are reviewed and approved by the general scholarship committee to make sure they meet all specifications required.

Scholarships not listed under a specific college are awarded by the general scholarship committee. All selection following the computer's sorting is manually done, he said.

STUDENTS enrolled in more than one college should notify the SFA scholarship clerk, Novak said. The computer will list only the curriculum listed first on a student's admission records. The second curriculum must be added manually, he said.

Not all scholarships are awarded according to grade point average, Upham said. This varies according to requirements listed on the scholarship and which college a student is enrolled in.

"In the College of Arts and Sciences and student almost has to have a 4.0 grade point average because there are so many students and so little money available (in this college)," Upham said.

A student in grain science only has to have about a 2.5 grade-point average, he said.

Scholarships range in monetary value Upham said, but most scholarships awarded for financial need are about $300.

Kidnap suspects captured in Omaha

The two remaining suspects in the Jan. 25 kidnapping of a Kansas City woman were apprehended in Omaha by FBI agents on Friday night.

The FBI was working on a tip that one of the two suspects, Lyle Wood or Robert Beetum, had relatives in Omaha and might go there.

The two other suspects in the kidnapping were discovered in a Salina motel last Thursday.

One suspect, Edward Wade, 20, committed suicide when police tried to persuade the 17-year-old girl accompanying him to let them into the room.

The four suspects were wanted in the kidnapping of Susan Schnelle, 27. She was dumped along Highway K-177 Thursday morning, four miles south of Manhattan.

After three years of work, Boggs major college material

By CINDY COX
Collegian Reporter

Today, one day after her 21st birthday, Beth Boggs is a starter for the K-State women's basketball team. On her 18th birthday, she had never even played basketball.

Boggs, a 6-1 junior from Lenexa, went out for sports in high school, but her school didn't have a girls basketball team until after she graduated.

At Shawnee Mission Northwest, Boggs was an outstanding swimmer. She also played volleyball.

During her senior year, Boggs was offered a number of scholarships. She could have played volleyball at Arizona State or swum at Florida State. One small school offered a scholarship to play volleyball, basketball, swim and run track, Boggs said.

IN THE END, she accepted a K-State basketball scholarship.

"My dad helped me get the scholarship. He talked to the coaches before I had even met them," she said.

"They've got to be kidding!" was Boggs' reaction to the K-State offer. "I think I've been asked a million times why I came to K-State. I really don't know why. It's closer to home. I just wanted to try something new.

"The home economics department was one reason for choosing K-State," the interior design major said. "It's one of the best."

Boggs gained her first basketball experience the summer before her freshman year at Coach Judy Akers's summer camp.

Beth Boggs

"I realized how much I didn't know about basketball," Boggs said. "They (the coaches) did, too!"

BOGGS remembers one of the incidents that quickly gave away her basketball ignorance.

"Coach Akers said we were going to do one-on-one drill at camp the first summer," Boggs said, "and I asked what one-on-one was."

"I didn't even know how to check into a game the first time I got to play," she said.

Boggs has come a long way from that first summer three years ago.

On the Wildcats' recent western tour, she scored a personal high of 23 points against Long Beach State. She also pulled down 17 rebounds.

She had 18 points and 18 rebounds against the University of Missouri and scored 21 points against Central Missouri State earlier this season. Last Friday at the Lady Jayhawk Classic she scored 19 points as the Wildcats upset previously unbeaten Nevada Las-Vegas.

SHE HAS improved through experience, she said.

"I'm beginning to get to play more," she said. "I'm more seasoned, more experienced."

But basketball hasn't been easy for Boggs.

"When I came up here everyone was understanding and patient, but they couldn't really understand how anyone could be so bad," Boggs said.

"My freshman year, I was kind of doubting my selection because I didn't know what I was doing. My parents just said to not give up and keep on working. They said everything would work out.

"Both my parents are always behind me in all I do," she said.

BOGGS trained twice a day last summer in Manhattan, working on drills and running, she said. She scrimmaged with whoever was around to get game experience.

"I'm just now starting to pick up little secrets, like driving on people. Friends help me on little things.

"I guess I'm kind of running out of time and it's just getting fun now," she said.

Boggs said she hasn't heard of anyone else being recruited to play major college basketball without any experience, or of any coaches, except Akers, offering a scholarship to someone they have never seen play.

"I guess I took a pretty big chance," she said, "but I'm glad."

"Coach Akers has had a lot of faith in me," Boggs said. "Everything I can do in basketball is because of coach Akers and coach (Jane) Schroeder. I guess I'm kind of a reflection of them."

Women's softball team opens tryouts Wednesday

Except for wearing gloves, nothing in January brings softball to mind. But even though it's winter, tryouts for the K-State softball team will be held Wednesday and Thursday.

The tryouts will follow a preliminary meeting at 4 p.m.

25-team tournament March 24 and 25 at Oklahoma University after the home-opener.

Anyone interested in playing that can't attend the tryouts should contact Dwight at 532-6970. Anyone interested in being manager for the team should also contact Dwight.

Sports

Wednesday in Ahearn 101, Softball Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said.

Dwight expects this to be a rebuilding year for the softball team. Only five players return from last year's team which was the best in K-State history. Meaning Dwight needs 10 players to fill the traveling squad of 15.

We're definitely not going to be an experienced team," she said.

The two main areas of concern will be pitching and hitting, Dwight said. "We have good defensive people back."

The team will open the season against Washburn, March 21 in Manhattan. All home games and practices are at Cico Park and all games are double-headers.

Playing one of the toughest schedules ever, according to Dwight, the team will travel to a

Women basketballers host Shockers tonight

Coming off a weekend split in Lawrence at the Lady Jayhawk Classic, where they defeated Nevada Las-Vegas and lost to Kansas University, the K-State women's basketball team comes home to take on the Wichita State Shockers in Ahearn Field House tonight at 7:35.

The 'Cats bring an 11-12 overall record and a 1-0 conference mark into tonight's second state conference game. In their first conference game last Wednesday night the 'Cats defeated the Kansas Lady Jayhawks in Lawrence, 66-65.

Wichita State brings a 7-11 overall and an 0-1 conference mark into the first meeting of the teams this year. The Shockers fell to Kansas 83-57 in their lone league outing of the season.

K-STATE has never lost to Wichita State in 15 previous meetings, including three a year ago when the 'Cats claimed 76-53 and 64-60 conference victories and a 77-47 win in the semi-finals of the Shocker Holiday Classic.

The Shockers are led by 5-11 center, Beth Epp, averaging 13.2 points and eight rebounds a game and 5-8 forward Terri O'Bryon, averaging 11 points and seven rebounds a contest.

Other starters for the Shockers include 5-5 Sandy Smith and 5-6 Betsy Journagan at guards and 5-9 Debbie Muirhead at forward.

Rowers look for members

The K-State crew is looking to add a few more stout young men and women to it's ranks. The rowers will be talking to interested students in the Union today.

The team is currently lifting weights, running and rowing in their indoor tank, rower Cliff Elliot said. The oarsmen have hopes of getting on the water at the Stockdale Recreation Area by the end of February.

Anyone that can't make it to the Union, but is interested in being on the team, should call Jerry Arnold at 776-5702 or Barbara Kocour at 539-7881.

Social skills course offers instruction in making friends

By KAREN EWING
Collegian Reporter

Those who have difficulty in making friends or starting a conversation may seek help from a social skills training class sponsored by the Center for Student Development.

The class is designed for those who need to learn the skill of initiating lasting relationships, said Julio Angulo, a class instructor and counselor at Holtz Hall.

The group meets each Friday from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m.

"We want a small group of about ten people—a group that's comfortable, not threatening," Angulo said. "We want an environment that's conducive to exploration. This is not a social group like a fraternity or sorority—more a place where people can learn skills."

"It's purpose is to meet a friend in the outside world," said Susan Crew, another instructor of the class and a counselor at Holtz Hall.

"Adults need to know how to function in the world. These people don't know how to deal with the world without getting bruised," Angulo said. "The reason they're there (in the class) is they've had enough of being alone and (have had) trouble dealing with the outside world. This doesn't mean they have to be entirely social with no privacy."

ANGULO SAID the group members are assigned "tasks" each week. An example of a "task" would be for the group member to start a conversation with someone he has always wanted to talk to.

The group member may use role playing in rehearsing the task while others in the group give suggestions, Crew said.

The instructors try to encourage friendships within the group, but also encourage each participant to find a friend elsewhere and not limit himself, he said.

Angulo said people who are shy have strict rules about social situations. The class would examine these rules and teach members how to live more comfortably and identify with the world.

MALE AND female relationships are also discussed, Crew said.

"We explore these expectations and discuss the timing involved in emotional activity and intimacy," she said.

"It's usually the male's responsibility in initiating a male-female relationship. We tell them the kind of clues they can extend to invite the opposite sex to be a friend. Many times clues are taken the wrong way. We talk about rules and typical views, too. There are too many to be comfortable without being anti-social," Angulo said.

"I got the idea (for social skills training) from seeing people on campus from mostly small towns trying to adjust to a large campus with no family or hometown there. I feel this is a special issue in this environment," she said.

Manhattan water supply free of cancer-related chemical Trihalomethane (THM) does not pose a threat to Manhattan's drinking water, according to Alan Shineman, Manhattan's superintendent of utilities.

THM is one of the chemicals suspected by the Environmental Protection Agency of causing cancer when ingested over a lifetime.

THM presents a problem only in those areas which get their water supplies from surface water systems that have been subjected to industrial wastes, Shineman said. Manhattan's water supply is drawn from an underground water system.

"In the U.S. THM is hardly ever discovered in ground water," according to Jack Burris, director of the State Department of Health's Water Resources. Manhattan's water should be free of THM, he said.

THM, a chemical related to chloroform, is a byproduct of the chlorine treatment used in decontaminating the Kansas River.

Dancers start at MD Bump-a-thon

The fourth annual Muscular Dystrophy Bump-a-Thon will begin at 4 p.m. today at Mother's Worry.

The goal for this year's Bump-a-Thon, according to Fred Lechner, master of ceremonies and co-owner of Mother's, is $1 more than the $12,500 reached last year.

Seventeen couples will attempt to dance 63 hours this year and the winning couple will represent K-State at the Jerry Lewis Labor Day Muscular Dystrophy Telethon.

If the projected amount of money, $13,000, is raised, the couple will have an all-expenses paid trip to the telethon.

In addition to the dancing, the Bump-a-Thon will feature toilet darts, beer chugging and super-team competition. The Kansas MD poster child will attend the Bump-a-Thon.

Any profits more than the average amount of profit at Mother's Worry will be donated to the Bump-a-Thon, Lechner said.

The event will last Wednesday through Thursday, and admission prices will vary according to the time and day.

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or a senior majoring in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll receive an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost you thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have qualified for an elite engineering training program. With unequalled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs in private industry should you decide to leave the Navy later. (But we don't think you'll want to.)

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on February 6-10, or contact your Navy representative at 816-374-2376 (collect). If you prefer, send your résumé to the Navy Nuclear Officer Program, Code 312-B468, 4015 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va. 22203, and a Navy representative will contact you directly. The NUPOC-Collegiate Program. It can do more than help you finish college: it can lead to an exciting career opportunity.

Hotel fire toll reaches 17; firemen blast city officials

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—The death toll from the weekend fire at the historic Coates House hotel rose to at least 17 Monday with firemen accusing city officials of providing faulty equipment and inadequate manpower to fight the blaze.

The toll—with seven persons still not accounted for—makes the blaze the worst in Kansas City area history, surpassing the 15 killed during a 1924 apartment fire and the 16 killed in 1906 when a blaze swept through a building in adjoining Kansas City, Kan.

Three bodies were recovered from the charred rubble of the 110-year-old hotel Monday.

Firemen, appearing at Mayor Charles Wheeler's weekly news conference, blasted the city's 9-month-old fire protection plan, which changed firefighters' hours from the traditional 24 hours on, 24 hours off, to a 40-hour work week and rearranged the placement of firemen and equipment.

"If you don't get enough people there in the first 10 or 15 minutes, you're just going to be wetting the fire down," contended John Germann, president of the firefighters union. "In a fire like this, there's no chance of rescue after the first 10 or 15 minutes."

THE FIRE broke out in the south wing of the once-ornate six-story hotel early Saturday morning, reducing it to an icy shell before firemen were able to put it out.

At least four of the victims died in frenzied leaps to the pavement and others perished when the upper floors, where the fire apparently began, collapsed in flames.

Eleven persons were injured in the fire, and eight remained hospitalized Monday, one of them in critical condition.

More than 100 persons were uninjured but left homeless by the fire, although Maj. James Barker of the Salvation Army said most of them had obtained temporary lodging by Monday.

Barker said the Salvation Army had also received nearly $3,000 in donations, in addition to clothing and other items. The Red Cross and the City Union Mission had also established funds for the homeless.

THE FIREFIGHTERS told Wheeler Monday that the fire protection plan was responsible for many of the deaths in the hotel fire and that more lives would be lost unless the plan is changed.

"It was just a case of trying to decide which lives you would try to save when you couldn't get to them all," said Joe Galetti, one of the first firemen on the scene.

Wheeler defended the fire protection plan, but said "some heads are going to roll" if charges by Germann that records were falsified to support the plan were found to be true.

Researchers develop method to remove nitrates from water

By CLIFF BERNATH
Collegian Reporter

Three K-State researchers have developed a method of removing a potentially dangerous substance from water supplies.

The polymer, which removes certain nitrates and nitrites from polluted water, was developed by Clifton Meloan, professor of chemistry, Wayne Danen, associate professor of chemistry and Shang-Jaw Chiou, graduate research assistant.

"There is an average of 70 human illnesses and deaths due to nitrate poisoning each year in this country, plus losses of cattle, hogs, turkeys and sheep," according to a research report by Meloan and Danen.

Meloan said he became interested in the problem during a chemistry faculty research meeting in 1970 when he was challenged by a fellow faculty member to solve it.

"The problem was not removing the nitrate from the water—that's easy," Meloan said. "The real problem was to remove the nitrate without removing everything else in the water."

HIS FIRST effort led to a polymer which was .01 percent effective.

"It had selectivity (the ability to attract the nitrate) but not capacity (the ability to attract large amounts of nitrate)," Meloan said. "It was an academic success but a practical failure."

The next seven years of research brought a series of successes, failures and modifications, he said.

Then, three weeks ago, they developed a polymer that was 73 percent effective, he said.

"That's probably as high as we can go, economically," Meloan said.

He added that the polymer has only been successful in the lab and has not yet been field tested. Also, more research is needed to determine the degree of reusability of the polymer.

"It's still a long way from being ready for marketing," he said.

MELOAN AND Danen explained the dangers of nitrate poisoning in a report to the Kansas Water Resources Institute (KWRI) in conjunction with a request for a research grant in February, 1977. KWRI has approved their grant.

The report said that nitrate poisoning is most likely to occur in infants under six months of age. The nitrate deprives the red blood cells of oxygen which causes the child to turn blue. If not treated, the poisoning can lead to death.

The lack of oxygen can also cause mental retardation, according to the report.

After six months, chemical changes in the intestinal juices and the development of certain enzymes in the child make him less susceptible to nitrate poisoning, the report said.

THE EFFECTS of nitrate poisoning on cattle and other food producing farm animals are also significant, said Mark Spire, instructor in the department of surgery and medicine at Dykstra Veterinary Hospital.

Concentrations of 60 to 300 parts per million (ppm) of nitrate can cause a "decreased performance syndrome," Spire said. This syndrome is characterized by poor weight gain, vitamin A deficiency and, in pregnant animals, the birth of weak infants which may not survive, he said.

Police seek man in stabbing murder

By DAVE HUGHES
and KAY COLES
Staff Writers

Riley County police and K-State Security and Traffic officers spent about an hour searching Ahearn Field House for a murder suspect Tuesday afternoon.

Late last night police were still searching for Albert Dale Williams, 22, of Junction City, who is wanted in connection with the slaying of Pamela Parker, 24, a receptionist at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. Parker was slain early Tuesday afternoon at the chamber's office in downtown Manhattan.

Police said Parker was in the office during the lunch hour and was alone when the incident occurred. The victim was stabbed with a knife which had a 6-inch blade. Jim Rothschild, economic director of the chamber, found her body at 12:53 p.m.

NO ONE in the surrounding area saw anything suspicious, according to Inspector John LaFond of the Riley County Police Department (RCPD).

A floral delivery man delivered a package to the office at 12:30 p.m., at which time Parker was still alive, police said.

After searching the office, police determined that some Western Union money orders had been stolen, LaFond said.

Police then notified area banks of the missing money orders and alerted them to the possibility that someone might attempt to cash them.

A man did attempt to cash the money orders—first at the Union National Bank, 3rd and Humboldt, then he did cash one at the First National Bank at 701 Poyntz. The man then proceeded to the Kansas State Bank at Westloop Shopping Center.

A CLERK at the Kansas State Bank refused to cash the money order and it was near the bank where police finally caught up with the man.

The man reportedly was driving a brown Gremlin which was reported stolen from a Topeka car rental agency.

Police pursued the man down

Kimball and then south on Denison Ave. As the car neared the west side of Ahearn, the man attempted to pass another car, lost control of his car, which slid sideways down the road. The car was then backed into the parking lot of an apartment complex on Denison Ave. The man fled the car and ran into Ahearn at 4:25 p.m.

"I was standing on the balcony (of Leawood Apartments) talking to a friend when I saw a brown Gremlin backing down the street," said Cindy Bishop, junior in educational psychology.

"He gets out of his car and tears off and runs into Ahearn," she said. "He was really moving."

BISHOP SAID the man passed a campus security officer who was standing next to his car which was (See POLICE, p. 18)

Student Senate to consider reapportionment referendum

By DEBBIE RHEIN
Collegian Reporter

A bill calling for a referendum to reapportion Student Senate by living group and college will be considered by senate before Feb. 15 elections, according to Jane Knoche, Student Affairs Committee chairman.

The referendum provides for half of senate to be elected by college and half to be elected by living group. Currently, senate is elected by college only.

Knoche said reapportionment would be advantageous to both students and senators because students would have a representative for non-academic problems, and senators would have better contact with their constituency.

"If you are having parking problems in front of your apartment, you would have a senator to take that kind of problem to instead of just a college senator," she said.

KNOCHE SAID although senators are elected by college, most senators campaign and talk to students within their living groups. Students living in Greek houses represent 12 percent of the student body while 56 percent of senate is comprised of senators living in Greek houses, according to November figures.

Off-campus students represent 61 percent of the student body and 34 percent of senate is made up of senators living off-campus.

Students living in residence halls or scholarship houses represent 27 percent of the student body while 10 percent of senate consists of senators living in residence halls or scholarship houses.

Knoche said the bill establishing a referendum should be voted on by senate before elections are held Feb. 15. A simple majority of senate is required to pass the bill.

A referendum must be voted on by at least one-third of the student body and passed by at least half of the students voting before it can be enacted.

Dutch Maid robbed; no estimate of losses

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

A man and a woman armed with a small-caliber handgun robbed the Blue Hills Dutch Maid on Tuttle Creek Boulevard of an unknown amount of money last night.

"About 7:30, a guy and his girl friend walked into the store," said Kevin Calahan, night manager.

The suspect walked up to the post office window in the store and asked to cash a check. He then threw a sack on the counter and asked for the money, Calahan said.

Calahan said not much money was taken.

"The amount is not really known. We keep just enough for cashing $25 checks," Calahan said.

"At the time we were really busy...There was a couple of guys standing behind the robber. One of the witnesses was standing behind the guy and saw the gun," he said.

"The woman stepped in front of the witness, blocking his view of the gun," he said.

"She then said something to the witness like 'Times are hard, aren't they,'" Calahan said.

One of suspects is a white male about 20 years old, 5'10" and weighs between 140 and 150 pounds. He has brown hair and is wearing a green jacket and a blue cap. He has a pencil moustache, said L.D. Woodyard, Riley County Police Department night operations commander.

"The female companion is about 20 years old. She was about 5'2" and weighs about 100 pounds. She has brown hair and was wearing blue jeans and a blue ski jacket," Woodyard said.

"The suspects got away in a 1965 faded red Volkswagen sedan. They were last seen going north down Tuttle Creek Boulevard," he said.

They have not yet been apprehended.

Candidates for student body president discuss parking woes, fieldhouse need

By DOUGLAS DANIEL
SGA Editor

A new fieldhouse, parking and reapportionment were among the issues discussed by student body presidential candidates during an open forum sponsored by the Living Group Advisory Council last night in the Union Big 8 Room.

Presidential contenders Sam Brownback, Ted Knopp, Cindy Thomas and Stan Watt listed their top priorities and answered questions on topics of student concern at K-State.

Brownback said his top priorities are a new fieldhouse and student lobbying of state legislators. Knopp said his top priorities were academics and making student government more responsive to students.

THOMAS SAID her top priorities were getting funds for a new fieldhouse from sources other than students and in the area of advising. Stan Watt said his top priorities were increasing student senate effectiveness and communication. The candidates agreed that K-State should study the need of a new fieldhouse.

Brownback said students should pay up to $5 for a new fieldhouse but an increase in student fees should not be imposed until 1980 and when other groups agree to help pay for the project. Knopp said students should take the initiative and start paying for a fieldhouse now so they will have a top role in the planning of a facility.

Thomas said she favors the proposed referendum on a new fieldhouse so students can vote on the project. Watt said the questions of student funding for the fieldhouse and how much student funding should be examined by all students.

THE CANDIDATES agreed that parking was a problem at K-State.

Brownback said a shuttlebus system serving the campus and the city community should be investigated as a possible solution. Knopp said people should be re-directed to where parking is available such as West Stadium before parking lots are built.

Shaw throws hat into student president ring

Bernard Shaw, junior in pre-law, announced Tuesday his candidacy for student body president at K-State, joining a field of four students running for the office.

Shaw said he waited for this time to surface before he decided to run for student body president so he could see what the other candidates would do.

"As a candidate, I would like to try to be friends with as many people as I can so I can understand what their ideas are about the campus community and politics in general," Shaw said.

"I really want to get people to have a local, national and international point-of-view," he said.

Shaw, who had been a candidate for student body president three years ago, said apathy and the transition to college for younger students are some of the problems on campus.

"I think I have a chance this time because I have gone out to meet a lot of people," Shaw said.

★ 1978 ★ KANSAS STATE BUMP ★ A ★ THON ★ AT MOTHER'S

I hate people. Especially children.

I like to sneak up on them when they are only two or three or four years old, when their bodies are straight and healthy and full of bounce and fun, full of life and joy, when they're saying, "Look at me! Look at me! See how high I can jump!" and "Look at me, Mom, watch me catch the ball! Look at me, Dad, see how fast I can run!" Those are the little ones I like to pull down. Because I hate people. Especially children.

I like to watch little children trip and fall, just at that look-at-me stage when they're so proud of their first steps, fall and rise slowly, every day a little more slowly, until finally they have to hang on to a chair to pull themselves to a standing position. It makes me laugh when they can't stand up without having to first bend down and clutch their ankles, and then force their hands up their legs, their knees, their thighs until they are shakily, momentarily erect. And the more they struggle with what ought to be the most natural of functions, the better I like it. Because I hate people. Especially children.

I laugh when they can't turn over in bed, knowing that the minds inside their helpless heads are normal and keen and longing to break out into the freedom of the healthy-muscled world. And, finally, when they haven't a single muscle left, not even strength for the little act of independence of sipping liquid through a straw, when the inevitable downhill slide into helplessness leaves them without even the final muscle for the final breath—for breathing calls on muscles, too—then I say, "Good, I've done my work well, I've trapped these children in the most mysterious and hopeless disease known to man."

Or should I say unknown to man? Let man hurl himself into the galaxies and take snapshots of the moon but, down here on this earth where I prowl, he is still unable to find a cure for the scourge of little children. For I am MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY, the hater of people, especially children, and I dare you to stop me. It will take more money, more time, more science and more love than you have yet been willing to give. Yes, I am MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY. I hate people, especially children. And I dare you to stop me. I dare you!

Bodyguard gets fat salary

WASHINGTON—Joseph Califano's sometime bodyguard is probably the second highest-paid employee of the federal government.

Thomas Lemuel Johns earns $47,025 as administrative officer and security coordinator for Califano, the secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. Johns also gets monthly pension checks that total $31,200 a year for his 21 years with the Secret Service, including a stint as President Lyndon Johnson's chief bodyguard, according to officials of the District of Columbia pension system.

His $78,225 annual income from the government is completely legal.

His combined checks are less than President Carter's $200,000 salary, but they total more than the $66,000 that Califano—and other Cabinet members—earn yearly and more even than Vice President Walter Mondale's $75,000.

'Good buddies' congregate

NEW YORK—A bunch of ratchet-jawed, signal stoppers from as far away as the Iceberg convoyed in the Big Lady to crack the whip Tuesday for the title of master modulator.

That's CB talk for "A group of smooth talking, citizens band radio enthusiasts from as far away as Anchorage, Alaska, gathered in New York City to move their lips rapidly Tuesday for the title of top talker of the airwaves."

A. Robert Merrill, a welfare administrator for the Mormon Church in Utah, handled it best, outchattering five other finalists for the national championship of the world of citizens band radio. He won a new automobile, equipped with CB of course, $5,000 for personal appearances and a 10-day trip for two to London.

The finalists, survivors from a list of 17,000 entrants nationwide, met in a New York hotel for the finale.

Rock musician dies

AMSTERDAM, THE NETHERLANDS—Gregory Herbert, a saxophone player and recent member of the rock group Blood Sweat and Tears, was found dead Tuesday in an Amsterdam hotel room where a search uncovered some drugs, police reported.

The search of the 30-year-old jazz musician's room turned up "significant quantities" of heroin and cocaine, as well as a number of hypodermic syringes, a police spokesman said. The cause of death was not immediately determined and an autopsy was planned.

Herbert's body was found by other band members who were returning from dinner. The rock group immediately canceled an evening concert in The Hague and flew to London where a spokesman said they will decide whether to continue their European tour.

Snow buries trucker

MANSFIELD, OHIO—A six-day ordeal ended for a Cleveland truck driver Tuesday when Ohio National Guardsmen uncovered his steel-hauling rig in a 20-foot-high snowdrift.

James Truly had been imprisoned in the buried truck since last Thursday, when a savage blizzard struck the Midwest.

Guardsmen said Truly told them he was cold and thirsty, but he had no signs of frostbite or other injury.

They said the driver forced a pipe through the roof of his rig so he could breathe. He had no food but ate snow for water while he huddled in blankets he carried in the truck, the rescuers said.

OPEC nations to meet today

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP)—Five members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries meet here today to try to solve their longstanding and sometimes bitter quarrels over price scales for different qualities of crude oil.

The sums of money involved are small, but dampening the acrimony that has developed on occasion among OPEC countries is important to the group as it seeks a role as political leader of the Third World.

An Iranian delegate said he expected the five countries, which comprise a subcommittee of the 13-nation organization, to solve OPEC's differences.

A source in the OPEC secretariat expressed doubt that another pending issue—that of changing the way oil prices are quoted away from the dollar—would come up at the meeting.

The five nations represented here are Saudi Arabia, the world's leading oil exporter, Iran, Iraq, Kuwait and Venezuela. Venezuela's representatives will mediate the conference.

SAUDI OIL minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani said during the weekend that the subcommittee would discuss changing the dollar quotations now usually used for oil into some sort of "petrounit" made up of several other currencies.

Such a move would not mean that oil actually would be paid for in anything but dollars, but only that OPEC price quotations would be in "petrounits." This would protect the buying power of OPEC members, since if the dollar weakened, they could demand more dollars.

Such a shift was decided on by OPEC more than two years ago but was never implemented. Kuwaiti oil minister Abdul Muttalib al-Kasimi was quoted by Kuwait state radio Tuesday as supporting Yamani's position that such protection is needed.

Restricted federal aid for abortions

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph Califano announced last week that the federal government will help finance abortions for impoverished women who are victims of rape or incest.

The new regulations, which will go into effect Feb. 7, 1978, allow federal aid for these women providing they report the crime within 60 days to a law enforcement or public health agency.

The 60-day period, according to H.E.W., "was arrived at by balancing the competing interest of providing sufficient time to permit victims of rape or incest to make reasoned decisions as to how and whether to report these incidents, with the necessity to protect against fraudulent reporting."

BUT BECAUSE THE law uses the general term rape, rather than forcible rape, any pregnant girl under the age of consent would be considered to have been raped, merely by reporting the pregnancy.

Because of this terminology, H.E.W.'s program may have the effect of producing misleading statistics on the frequency of rape in impoverished areas of the United States.

WHY SHOULD a women have to be raped, or a victim of incest to qualify for federal abortion aid?

Women should not have to meet such drastic requirements to receive the help they need.

As long as the government is going to subsidize abortions, it should offer the service to all needy women, regardless of the circumstances.

Greek's complaint unwarranted

Re: the letter to the editor in the Jan. 31 Collegian, "Greeks criticized, imitated."

At first glance, the Jan. 30 article entitled "Greeks disrupt fans in Ahearn" does make it seem all greeks are getting unfair publicity. But, on further examination, it does state these "greeks" are certain members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, and all thoughts of generalization should end there. The fact remains the same, they are "greeks" and they are members of Sigma Phi Epsilon. Mitchell's Tuesday letter simply avoids and confuses the issue at hand. In the original letter, there was no mention of any wish to imitate greeks.

The original letter was only an honest effort to let an individual view his thoughts and feelings over the surrounding circumstances at last Saturday's basketball game—circumstances which Mitchell seems to know very little about. I would guess that if Mitchell had to sit near the Sig Eps and encounter their abusive behavior as I do, he would never have written in the first place.

Think twice about others

Editor,

On behalf of many residence hall residents, I would like to state that Mitchell's letter to the editor ("Greeks criticized, imitated," Jan. 31 Collegian) showed a complete lack of preparation and common sense as illustrated by his obviously weak comments.

Mitchell seems to have the impression that using the word "greeks" in the title of Jarvis' letter ("Greeks disrupt fans in Ahearn," Jan. 30 Collegian) on the exploits of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity blames the whole greek system for those actions. Jarvis is in no way blaming the whole system. He only presented the facts which I, too, witnessed. Anyone familiar with the English language and newspaper writing should see the Collegian used the word "greeks" only as a description. After all, Sig Eps are greeks, aren't they?

I would also like to voice disapproval over Mitchell's apparent prejudice against dorm residents. It seemed to be a main purpose in his letter. I find no basis for it. There were no indications in the Monday letters that they were written by dorm residents. Mitchell's remark stating that residence hall residents attempt to be like greeks by participating in natural, original and necessary social activities is completely uncalled for. I sort of thought that liking to dance, drink beer and have fun was natural and not a deep desire to be like a greek.

I think Mitchell and any others with his same opinion should have more respect for dorm residents and all other K-State students. We should all think twice about others before committing uncalled for actions, whether in daily life or K-State basketball games.

Looking for Ms. Hershey Bar

It was going to be easy. Don't ask me why, I could just feel it—like the time I knew mother was going to try to sneak some spinach past me by baking it in brownies. She said they were the "good kind" but I knew they were going to be spinach.

As I zeroed in on the eight ball bank shot that was about to win me another dollar, my line of sight jumped 10 feet past the end of the pool table to the girl at the corner of the bar. One mis-que and three curse words later, I handed my obese, balding opponent the first dollar he had ever won on a pool game in his life.

But I was in luck. The bosomy blond at the bar had turned to order another drink just as my stick made that humiliating "clank" that sent the cue ball reeling for the corner pocket.

Drink in hand, which was intelligently held waist-high to hide the spaghetti stain on my belt, I swaggered (jetset form of the verb staggered) up to her. Leaning on the bar, I took a nonchalant sip of the drink I had been nursing for the past three hours.

"SAY BEAUTIFUL, mind if I buy that drink for you?" I asked as I wiped my chin with my tie. I smiled at my cleverness, knowing I had just unfurled one of my best opening lines.

My heart beat in my throat as I waited for her response. The doctors said it was a miracle I continued to live with my heart lodged tightly between my trachea and larynx, but at that moment I was oblivious to the discomfort, overcome by a wave of adrenalin.

"Oh, that's all right," she said, leaning forward just enough for verification. "My husband buys all my drinks," she said, pointing to the fat, balding man who was now sweating at the thought of my encroachment.

Because of my gentlemanly nature—and the cute new prospect that took a seat farther down the bar—I backed away from the blond, gracefully involving myself in a seven-person pile-up as I tumbled onto a table full of drunken white-collar crazies behind me. Fortunately, they were too euphoric (or possibly ill) to think, so I got out of it with a blush, a smile and six quick "excuse me's."

AS I turned to check on my number two prospect, my head began to spin like a 33 and a third rpm record that had been kicked up to 78 just for grins. For an instant, I saw the beautiful brunette waltzing toward me, but just as she got within an arm's length, she reached out and ground a spinach brownie in my face.

Damn—another hallucination. I wanted to see a specialist about these frequent "visions" but I was afraid it might damage my reputation as a teacher at the Kansas School for Blind Porpoises.

I steadied myself against the bar as the spinning slowed to its normal 33 and a third. Again, I was in luck—the brunette beauty was still there, and now she was smiling at me!

I tucked in my shirt, straightened my tie as I simultaneously exercised the muscles in my neck and braced myself for the "last 10 feet." After my first strike-out, my confidence was a bit shaken, but finally I was sure. It was going to be easy.

AN HOUR later, I was busy explaining to my new-found friend how the lighted dial on my electric blanket worked. As I talked, my mind floated. Not only was she better than my electric blanket, I thought, but here was someone who could possibly—just possibly—help me find a part of myself I had been looking for for months.

I finished my explanation and let our mutual smiles warm me more than the blanket that covered us could ever hope to. To my surprise, her smile quickly turned to a frown of anticipation.

"There's something I have to ask you," she said. I searched for an answer as to what could be wrong, braced myself for the worst, then told her to ask away.

"You might think I'm crazy," she said, slowly picking her words, "but do you have any spinach brownies in the house?"

No arrest power for game wardens

Editor,

This is in response to the biased balderdash being published in a column entitled "The Huntsman."

In true "Great White Hunter" fashion our resident propagandist for the "Forestry, Fish and Game Commission" (FFGC) has written a column to keep the "hunters and anglers abreast of legislation" in this macho endeavor of roughing it in the great outdoors. It might be interesting to a few people who don't engage in this ritualistic purification of the soul—accomplished by gunning down fauna—to acquaint themselves with the ramifications of the laws proposed by the FFGC.

THE REASON I accuse Dale Kellison of being one of Harold Lusk's (the FFGC commissioner) sycophants is because of one paragraph I cite from his article "Hunting Legislation Outlined."

"The proposals will help benefit wildlife, wildlife recreation and help improve commission operation."

This is presented in Kellison's column as dogma. It may not have occurred to him that anyone could disagree with the almighty authority in Pratt, but I can and do and I hope some other people do the same. From my last encounter with a game warden in the Gage Center parking lot and in Topeka, I would equate the game wardens with Nazis and gestapo troops rather than protectors of one of our natural assets. I was forcibly detained and held and it was demanded that I produce my identification by one of our heroic wardens for saying that remarks made by this fellow in the Topeka Capital Journal were "dumb." That really turned him on! I was referring to his assessment that there are no cougars in the state of Kansas. When I saw that this fellow was in a great suit, I walked away from him. He proceeded to yell, "stop, stop" and when I proceeded to my car he ran after me and grabbed me from behind by both arms and said, "I want to see your identification, show me your identification." I told him, "Let go of me." Now I never did show him any identification and he finally let go of me and walked away in what appeared to me to be cold fury.

THIS IS the sort of individual we are being asked to extend "full peace officer" authority. You can rest assured that I would have been arrested for voicing my opinion about cougars in the state of Kansas if that fellow had the authority to arrest. I would rather extend peace officer status to all the boy scouts in Kansas than to this bunch of ninny's that put on a uniform and want to play God (wardens).

Undoubtedly, the observations that rangers would arrest drunk drivers and pot harvesters are designed to produce the knee-jerk reaction—that law enforcement is a hallowed group with high ideals and superior judgment. Well that just doesn't wash after my encounter with the warden in Topeka.

What we need are game wardens who are concerned with fish and game, and who are professionals in that area and don't dilute their energies and waste taxpayers' money attending law enforcement academies.

As I said before, the proper receptacle for the FFGC legislation is the nearest garbage can, and I think maybe Kellison's future columns might be right there also if they continue in the same vein.

Union leader lifts boycott on wine

LOS ANGELES (AP)—An organized boycott that kept some California wine off the liberal cocktail party circuit for more than four years and drew support from politicians and trade unionists was called to a halt Tuesday by Cesar Chavez.

The leader of the United Farm Workers Union said boycotts against California's lettuce, table-grape and wine industries were no longer necessary.

Chavez said he was stopping the boycotts because of the effectiveness of a state law enacted in 1975 that provides for secret ballot elections on whether farm workers want a union to represent them.

More than 550 such elections have been held. Chavez's union holds contracts with 117 growers and is negotiating with 100 more following victories in certification elections.

Most of the boycotts ended with achievement of the announced goals of the UFW.

"The Agricultural Labor Relations Act is alive and functioning," Chavez said in his statement. "In California, farm workers in some places are now able to vote for the union of their choice and come to the bargaining table to negotiate with their employers."

Chavez's action, approved by the union executive board, ended international boycotts against grapes, head or iceberg lettuce not picked by members of the farm workers' union, along with E & J Gallo table wines.

Elderly receive assistance from social service groups

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

The Consumer Assistance and Information for the Aging (CA&I) is a blessing to many older adults in Manhattan.

The CA&I provides information, in 18 Kansas counties, on services available to the elderly. Manhattan has 28 services.

"Anyone can call her if they don't know who to call or where to go," Cathy Butts, CA&I director, said.

The services are sponsored by area groups, businesses or city and county departments. As a need arises someone willing to provide the needed service is located. CA&I will help the new service begin and will assist it with any problems, she said.

A GROCERY delivery service is needed now, Butts said. Doebele's in Aggieville was delivering groceries when they went out of business. Then Keller's Superette took over. For various reason Keller's had to quit.

"The whole thing really was...it got too large," owner Richard Keller said. "We would have had to get more help and cars and that would have jumped the cost for the service too high for them (the elderly)," he said.

"There are about 20 people in need of the service," Butts said. Work has started on locating area persons or businesses to begin the service again.

Dunne's Pharmacy and Norton Drugs have free delivery for person 60 years old and over. For those over 65, Learned's Prescription, Miller's Pharmacy and Palace Drugs will deliver free.

Meals-on-Wheels, sponsored by Memorial Hospital, delivers hot meals to people just out of the hospital, on special diets, or not wanting to cook their own meals, said Nancy Hanes, Meals-on-Wheels coordinator. These meals cost $1.25.

A SNACK containing a sandwich, fruit and milk or orange drink can be delivered along with the noon meal for 75 cents, Hanes said.

Five days a week, senior citizens can eat lunch at the Apartment Towers or Douglass Center.

"They furnish hot nutritious meals," Butts said. There is no fee charged, but the participants are asked to donate as much as they can.

The Manhattan Recreation Commission sponsors a Tuesday Senior Fellowship Club. Members spend the morning playing cards and visiting with each other. Lunch is usually a potluck meal and craft classes are conducted in the afternoon.

The First United Methodist Church, the First United Presbyterian Church and the Seven Dolors Catholic Church also have older adult fellowships.

MANHATTAN has two types of transportation services available to elderly citizens.

The City Commission has made available taxi coupons for persons over 62 years old. These coupons are purchased from the city clerk or treasurer for 75 cents. There is a limit of 10 coupons a month. The coupon entitles the holder to a free one-way trip within the Manhattan city limits.

Any person, over 60 years old, can become a member of the Aging Transportation Association (ATA). A membership fee of $5 is charged which entitles the member to ride the ATA buses for a 30 cent donation. Non-members can ride the buses also, but a 60 cents donation is requested. Reservations to ride the buses must be made on day in advance.

ATA owns and operates two buses.

"THE FIRST bus runs only in Manhattan, the second goes to Ogden, Fort Riley and Leonardville," she said.

The CA&I has organized a handyman service, also.

"It is a clearing house for those who need things done and those who can do them," Butts said. The jobs consist of house maintenance, repairs and anything else the older adult needs done and cannot do.

A homemakers service is also provided for people who need simple housework done.

There is no set fee for these services. Handyman and Homemakers puts the employer and employee together. They set the price among themselves.

"No one will do it (help with the Handyman or Homemakers programs). It would be a good job for a college student. They could be paid for running the sweeper, washing a couple loads of laundry; maybe cooking a hot meal," Butts said.

THE RILEY County Mental Health Association sponsors the Retired Senior Volunteers Program (RSVP). These persons volunteer their skills and services. They receive no salary, but are paid for their expenses and mileage.

The RSVP volunteers provide tutoring and counseling in grade schools. They also operate the elderly Telephone Reassurance Program and entertain at nursing homes.

There are 142 members in RSVP. The only qualifications to join are being an older adult with the desire to do volunteer work.

"I emphasize that our program, unlike the others that help elderly people, ... (is the) the only program designed to help the elderly help others," Carol Vaughn, RSVP director, said.

Western Kansas economy dictates size of textbook orders for stores

By CINDY FRIESEN
Staff Writer

The economy in western Kansas not only dictates farmers' lifestyles but also helps determine the number of textbooks ordered each semester by the K-State Union Bookstore.

When estimating the number of books needed for each semester, bookstore managers must consider several factors, according to Wanda Dieckhoff, Varney's textbook manager and Jerry Fields, Union Bookstore book manager.

The economic situation in western Kansas and unemployment figures are two of these factors, Fields said.

"Since many students are from western Kansas, I look at the economic situation out there. We can expect a big enrollment when times are good," he said.

"We also look at unemployment statistics. When unemployment is high, enrollment is higher because more people go to school when they can't find a job," he said.

BOTH managers also said numerous records of past book sales and past enrollment figures are kept to aid in the estimation process.

The estimating procedure begins when instructors are asked to turn in book reports of needed texts and projected class enrollment figures.

As book reports come in, several weeks are spent compiling the information and putting book orders together, Dieckhoff said.

"It's (estimating and ordering) a long procedure and many instructors don't realize how important it is to get their reports in by the end of October," she said. "Getting orders together is a good six-week project and when they come in late, it complicates matters."

"We usually have 70 percent of the reports in by the end of October, and then they just dribble in. Sometimes 15 to 20 percent still aren't in by finals week or even later," Fields said.

OTHER factors considered when estimating book orders are the number of students buying books from other students and the number of books to order for new courses, Fields said.

"New courses are particularly hard. We have to look at the general interest in the subject matter and who is teaching the course. We have to keep on top of the popular faculty members to aid in our estimates," he said.

The managers said they believe estimating orders is easier because there are two bookstores in town.

Having two stores is helpful because the two managers share information and discuss the progress of their book sales. It is, however, illegal for them to confer on book ordering, Fields said.

"It would be a violation of anti-trust laws if we decided that I would order 70 percent of the market on one book...if she (Dieckhoff) ordered 70 percent on another. This would be illegally dividing the market," he said.

EVEN with all the planning that goes into book ordering, overstocking and understocking still occurs, Dieckhoff said.

"Part of the problem is that each semester there is a higher enrollment in some of the classes than pre-enrollment indicated, and the Union and I misjudge the number to order," she said.

"We keep numerous records on past book sales and if a book hasn't sold well in the past, I usually won't order as many (as may be needed)," Fields said. "But sometimes a class suddenly shoots up in popularity, especially if a popular instructor is teaching the course."

Another factor adding to book shortage is unreported or late book orders.

"One instructor may order a text for his class, but later others may also decide to use it and we run short," Dieckhoff said.

When there is a shortage, the book managers try to get an updated enrollment figure and decide how severe the shortage is.

"If there is a shortage, the book managers try to get an updated enrollment figure and decide how severe the shortage is."

"If there is a small shortage, we will usually special-order for the student. If there is a large shortage, I will talk to the instructor and find out what the enrollment is, then put in a rush order with the publisher or the used book jobber," Fields said.

Even when the books are rush ordered, it may take up to four to six weeks for the book to come in, Dieckhoff said.

"I know it's frustrating for students when they can't get the books they need right away," she said. "Most are very understanding but then, that still doesn't solve the problem."

Campus cops warn students, faculty, staff to register cars

By BRUCE DONLEY
Collegian Reporter

An ounce of prevention may be worth $25.

K-State traffic regulations state that vehicles operated by students faculty or staff must be registered and display current stickers. Failure to do so could result in a fine of up to $25.

Every semester some students who drive their parents' or a friend's car feel it is not necessary to register it, according to Paul Nelson, director of Security and Traffic.

THE FIRST ticket for an unregistered vehicle is a warning but subsequent tickets yield a $15 fine if paid within 48 hours and $25 after 8 hours.

"We make every effort to trace down cars with no identification stickers," Nelson said. "We write to the motor vehicle department in every state there is."

"It's almost impossible to keep tabs on all unregistered vehicles," Nelson said, but measures are taken to do so.

"We put a list of the license numbers of unregistered cars in our patrol cars," he said.

Using a parent's or friend's car and trying to slip by with visitor's status usually won't work.

"An experienced patrolman," Nelson said, "can usually look at a car and tell if it's a visitor's car or not."

WHEN A visitor to the campus receives a ticket he should bring it to the Security and Traffic office to clear it.

"If we can't make a connection with the college we go ahead and void them," Nelson said.

Any car driven by a student should be registered even if the student is only using it temporarily. If a student's car breaks down and he is using another car, he may pick up an auto repair sticker which is valid for two weeks.

Using someone else's identification sticker or parking permit would result in a misuse fee of $25.

"Sometimes people go to so much effort to beat the system when they'd be much better off if they made a little effort to get along with it," Nelson said.

New drug ed chief continues helping people using drugs

Helping students involved with drugs will be the main objective of the Drug Education Center this semester, according to David Newhaus, Drug Ed director.

Newhaus, who became director today following the resignation of Jeff Morris, said he will try to implement a follow-through program to continue helping former drug users stay away from drugs.

The program will consist of probation counseling and educating people about the effects and problems of drugs, Newhaus said.

"If you just turn somebody back on the street without educating them, you won't see a permanent change in their behavior," he said.

NEWHAUS said he hopes to reinstitute the Middle Riley County Dope Report, which consists of a listing of the drugs available in town and contains educational tips about drugs. When dangerous drugs are being sold in Manhattan the report is used to warn users away from the drugs.

Newhaus said he would like to lecture to classes about drugs and crisis problems.

"I feel that anyone in a counseling position will come in contact with drug problems sometime. I think that they should be trained in dealing with drug-related problems," he said.

Newhaus is a junior in psychology and social work and has worked six months at the drug center as a volunteer.

Questions unveiled in anarchists' case

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)—Documents from the final days of the Sacco-Vanzetti case—unveiled Tuesday after 50 years—pose new questions about the haste and certainty with which a Harvard president and two other men helped send two anarchists to the electric chair.

Historians are divided on whether Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti were proven guilty.

Two questions arise from ambiguously dated drafts of an 11th-hour report to then Gov. Alvan Fuller and from a phrase appearing in an early draft of the report but not in the final report.

The ambiguous dates could indicate the authors wrote their conclusions before hearing out the defense.

The phrase could indicate they were less certain about Vanzetti's guilt than about Sacco's.

SACCO and Vanzetti were executed Aug. 23, 1927, for a payroll robbery and two murders in South Braintree in 1920. They maintained their innocence to the end, claiming they were persecuted because they were Italian-born anarchists. Their case became a "cause celebre" to radicals around the world.

But one appeal after another failed and, with excitement high, Fuller in 1927 appointed A. Lawrence Lowell, president of Harvard University, to head a commission of three eminent men to review the court proceedings for him.

The other members of the commission were Samuel Stratton, 68, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Robert Grant, 75, a former probate judge. Lowell was 70.

The commission reported on July 27, 1927, that the trial had been fair and that it believed Sacco and Vanzetti were guilty.

Within a month, the two men were executed and radicals around the world launched protests.

Male prostitute

K-Stater sells body — for $50,000

He has had his close calls. He survived a knifing, countless muggings, and lives in fear. Yet, for $50,000 a year, he says he would do it all again.

Bill is a male prostitute, a gigolo, (or, in his own terms, a "chicken"). He has been one since he was 13 years old. He is now 19, and rich.

During the two and one-half years Bill was most active as a prostitute, he claims to have preformed more than 1,600 male tricks and 100 female tricks.

The K-State sophomore in animal science has worked the streets of Kansas City and Chicago. Now, he says, he only does an occasional trick in Manhattan.

Prostitution by most cities' standards is defined as soliciting for immoral purposes, according to Marvin Halstead, a spokesman from the Public Affairs Department of the Kansas City, Mo. Police Department.

In order to be charged with prostitution, one must quote a price and sexual act which will be done, he said.

In 1976, 1,294 people were arrested in Kansas City on prostitution charges. Of that number, 99 were arrested for procurring—they were pimps. Two hundred and thirty six were clients. Almost 600 men were arrested on sodomy charges, he said.

I would go out and trick. I could make anywhere from $20 to $50 during the break.

Male prostitution is not uncommon. Although no conclusive research has been compiled to date, some researchers contend it has reached epidemic proportions.

"It is quite common, and in some areas it is reaching epidemic proportions," said Sheone MacKenzie, research analyst for the Entrance into Female Prostitution Research at the University of Washington, Seattle.

"In many cities we have found teenage boys who are prostitutes. They are, in fact, common, and in many areas almost equal to the number of teenage girl prostitutes. These are the ages—between 12 and 19 years old.

"Male prostitution in many areas has become organized. We are finding they have pimps. They work in massage parlors and are dealing in pornography," she said.

BILL was 11 when his parents began having marital difficulties. He cites this as the reason, why, at age 13, he ran from his Topeka home to friends in Kansas City. He left with $200 in savings.

It did not take long to establish contacts. Friends arranged housing. To earn money, they encouraged him to become a male prostitute.

"I went down to 13th Street in Kansas City. That's where a lot of the women prostitutes hang out—across from Memorial Stadium. And I sat on the water fountain. I was really perturbed because I knew it was hot with police around there. I didn't know where to go, so I just sat there."

Bill watched another "chicken" pick up a customer.

"This car kept driving around. It was just a matter of the 'chicken' nodding his head towards the car. If the driver was interested he would pull over to the curb. They would then talk business."

Bill's first trick was with a 56-year-old white male. He charged $20. Unlike many "chickens" on the streets, Bill says he had a goal. That goal was to get an education. He went to high school and worked the streets at night.

"We had open lunch at school. And that's when I did a lot of mine (tricks), during the school lunch break. I went to a downtown school, a Catholic school. I would go out and trick. I could make anywhere from $20 to $50 during the break. And then, at nights I could keep on working."

THE GIGOLO talked freely and openly about many of his encounters. But he was hesitant to comment on specific activities between himself and customers.

One such incident related to his knifing.

"I got hooked up with this guy who was on drugs. Somehow he had stolen this other guy's wallet with this dude's credit cards. Anyway, the guy on drugs really racked up a big bill.

"The other guy found him. I happened to be with him. There was a big fight. And the end process was, well, I got knifed."

Another occurrence was with a man who preferred sex and sado-masochism, (beatings in bondage).

"I hated it. I was in this bar with a bunch of S and M people. I got to looking around and I thought 'um, I'm going to enjoy this.'

"One guy had leather pants on, leather shirt on, leather vest, and a chain around his neck. Oh hell, this guy picked me up. He pulled a gun and started beating me, that was the end."

WHILE he and other "chickens" were working the streets, they protected themselves by taking turns as lookouts.

"A caller would stand on the street corner and look for cops. That way, everybody would be able to work. When the cops would come we'd go play pinball. If the cops would even see us talking with an older guy they would arrest us.

"One time, we were all arrested and put in this van. Anyway, we all look out for one another," he said.

Bill wouldn't comment on specific details but he did outline what was expected for a male prostitute.

"A lot of the tricks didn't want to do us, they wanted to get done by us. A lot of it isn't intercourse, but it is still 20 bucks," he said.

Although most of his tricks were men, Bill said he made more money with women.

"I made a lot more money per trick with women because it was with prominent women. Their husbands were out of town or some reason like that. But I prefer men."

He worked alone. That way, he said he didn't have a pimp to take any of his profits. But despite his means of economizing, Bill was robbed often.

"At least, three times a month I was bumped off the road. Sometimes by women hookers. I was held down and my money was stolen by women prostitutes or people on drugs...they knew I had money," he said.

According to Bill, the style of dress was important. He wore what most "chickens" did; blue jeans, tennis shoes, a flannel shirt and jacket.

AS THE years progressed, Bill improved his techniques. He said there became a style to his "pickups."

"I would stand by a pinball machine. I came to find out that's where a lot of the 'chickens' hung out. We would Bill averaged $140 a night making a weekly average of $980 a week, or $50,000 a year.

stand there and play pinball. The guys looking for a trick would come in there and stand next to the machine and give you a quarter to play.

"During this time you would talk it out and decide what you were to get and for how much."

Most of Bill's clients were older. He said they sought him out.

"After awhile the people looking for a trick know where to go...they come looking for you, you don't have to go to them. All we had to do was stand up against a building or prop up against a meter. They would do all the rest."

Fantasies are an important factor in the gigolo's business, Bill said.

"People act out on us what they have always dreamed of doing to their spouses — things they would never do to their wives, but they have always dreamed about doing."

BILL'S clients are called "chicken hawks." If a client acts "strange," Bill said an underground system warns other "chickens."

"We do everything pretty discreet, because we could get into a lot of trouble, not only for prostitution but for sodomy. Everything is kept pretty quiet. I have never told anyone who I have tricked with.

"The streets are one of the most effective means of communication. If someone wierd is out on the streets looking for 'chickens' — everyone knows about it within a day and a half."

For the "chicken" out on the streets trust is essential. Bill said, the "chicken" must know who to deal with.

"A lot of people think you've got to be dumb in order to be a prostitute — that's not true at all. You've got to know and be smart enough to know where to go. You've got to stay away from certain kinds of people. It takes brains, whether a person thinks so or not.

"People think that if a woman has boobs all she has to do is hang her boobs over a street sign and she will get picked up. No...You've got to be smart enough to lose people," he said.

BILL averaged $140 a night making a weekly average of $980 a week, or $50,000 a year. The job, he said, did have its draw-backs. He required a medical examination, at least once a month, if not more often.

"We went just to make sure we hadn't gotten anything. Then, if we were really unsure we went the next day. But mostly, you can tell if a person has something by how clean he is in bed.

"The doctors at the clinic would get to know us real well. Everytime we came in they'd just give us a shot and ask how business was. We must have gone through gallon jugs of penicillin," he said.

According to Bill, prostitution is an occupation which is only good for the young person, those ranging from 12 to 30 years old.

"Why younger? Well, see, I am always scared about getting into an older guy. Youth is the first thing they look for. A client doesn't want something that's been on the street for a long time, somebody that is all worn out. They want the younger person. And then they look at what you are like, the way you dress. They want the natural look.

"On the other hand, an older guy has connections. That could be bad. An older guy could get you into trouble."

Bill said he never had trouble getting money from his clients. People would try not paying, he said, but they never got their way.

"What used to burn my ass up was when someone would say you weren't no good. They'd want their money back. I wouldn't give them their money back. Because, once you take shit off somebody they are always around. Or, worse yet, they tell somebody else. You've got to be strong."

He was 13 when he went to Kansas City. He has no regrets.

"My parents know what I've done. I've met face-to-face with them. What they don't know is that every once in awhile, I still do it. My mother, she knows I've got money. Basically I'm saving it, in case of hard times."

Cocktails in unions not yet dead issue

TOPEKA (AP)—An effort to kill a proposal to permit the consumption of liquor in state university student unions was defeated Tuesday in a Senate committee, keeping the measure alive at least temporarily.

Sen. Edward Reilly, R-Leavenworth, said he would ask representatives of the Kansas Board of Regents and the six state universities to appear before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

The measure would give officials at the six universities the authority to permit private cocktail parties by student and alumni groups in student unions.

Sen. John Crofoot (R-Cedar Point) said there presently are not enough places for private groups to meet in Manhattan and he assumes it was a similar situation in other universities. He said in some cases fraternity and other student groups are forced to drive long distances to larger cities for social gatherings.

THE REV. Richard Taylor, head of the Kansas United Dry Forces, urged defeat of the measure, saying it would encourage increased use of alcohol.

"Would we be promoting the use of heroin at K-State," Taylor asked the committee. "Heroin is no more addictive than alcohol."

Crofoot interrupted, "Reverend, you are missing the whole problem."

"That is the problem," Taylor said. "The drug problem."

The committee rejected a motion by Sen. Bill Morris (R-Wichita) to kill the bill. Several members said they wanted to delay action until hearing from university officials.

Sen. Don Allegrucci (D-Pittsburg) said he supported the idea of giving local university officials authority to decide how their student unions are operated. He said the present prohibition is inconvenient and could be dangerous if it forces students to travel long distances for social functions.

Life-in-rocks discovery may change way scientists search Mars for life

WASHINGTON (AP)—An abundance of life has been discovered inside rocks from a barren region of Antarctica—a surprising finding that could change the way scientists search for life on Mars.

Discovery of microbes, algae and fungi underneath the surface of certain rocks in Antarctica, one of earth's harshest environments, significantly extends the known limits of life on this planet and offers new hope that some form of life may exist on desolate neighboring worlds, scientists say.

The National Science Foundation and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, cosponsors of the Antarctic research, announced the findings Tuesday.

Drs. Imre Friedmann and Roseli Ocampo-Friedmann, a husband-wife team of biologists from Florida State University at Tallahassee, found life in light-colored rocks from Antarctica's Dry Valleys region, a frigid, arid area mostly devoid of ice and snow.

Similar, but more extreme, conditions were found on Mars by two American Viking spacecraft, which in 1976 searched unsuccessfully for conclusive signs of microbial life. But the unmanned craft were not designed to crack open rocks and peek inside.

Dr. Richard S. Young, NASA's chief of planetary biology, said that if Martian life exists only in the interior of rocks, "the design of the spacecraft would be influenced accordingly.

"For example, we would search out specific rock types and design a sampler which can open such rocks and provide subsurface samples which can be examined for life forms and organic molecules," Young said.

The Friedmanns have looked for life inside rocks for more than 15 years and earlier succeeded in finding living cells inside rocks from hot desert areas of America, Asia and Africa.

Friedmann said in an interview that in 1975, he found a layer of blue-green algae inside a Dry Valleys rock sent him by a friend.

"But we didn't know if this was widespread and common, or if it was a freak case," Friedmann said.

In two subsequent expeditions to Antarctica, the Friedmanns brought back 600 pounds of rocks and found that a dark, greenish layer of life existed inside semi-translucent rocks where sunlight penetrates several millimeters deep.

The thin, surface layer of rock not only traps heat and minute amounts of moisture but it also protects the organisms from the harsh outside environment and filters out excessive solar radiation.

Friedmann said he examined one life-bearing rock when the air temperature was about 14 degrees Fahrenheit and the rock surface about 28 degrees. At the layer of life a quarter-inch below the surface, it was 50 degrees, cozy for these types of organisms.

During the winter, when temperatures drop to 60 below zero "and the wind-chill factor is incredible," he said, the life forms—functioning again.

Friedmann said there is evidence the Dry Valleys once were more hospitable to life forms and probably supported surface life. But as conditions worsened, organisms began to withdraw and seek places where they could live.

City sets criteria to pick manager

Manhattan city commissioners set up standards for selecting a new city manager at a commission meeting Tuesday noon.

According to Mayor Russell Reitz, the prime concern of the Commission is finding someone who is experienced and affordable.

Reitz said that in considering the applications a recent college graduate or someone that has just finished interning in city gover-ment would receive less attention that someone who had some years experience in a city comparable in size to Manhattan.

The position opened when Les Rieger resigned from the job on Jan. 3.

Rieger said he resigned because of "physical and mental pressures detrimental to his well being".

Cause of hotel blaze unknown, officials say

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Fire officials said Tuesday that investigators may never find out what touched off the Coates House hotel fire, the most deadly blaze in Kansas City history.

Workers continued to probe the rubble of the 110-year-old downtown landmark, fearing the toll could rise above the 17 persons already known dead.

Five other persons remained missing in the aftermath of the Saturday morning fire, which gutted the south wing of the six-story home for many transients and elderly persons.

An eighth victim was identified Tuesday as Michael Ellis, whose 4-year-old daughter, Candy, was found dead earlier in the debris. Another daughter, Marcella, 2, is also feared dead.

WE'RE investigating the cause of the fire, but the exact cause has not been determined," said Sgt. Richard Helzer, supervisor of the police bomb and arson squad. "And we don't know if it ever will be."

Missouri State Fire Marshal James Helbig and State Public Safety Director Kenneth Carnes arrived Tuesday to begin their investigation of the blaze and the city's fire protection plan. Also on hand was Dick Best of the National Fire Prevention Association.

Kansas City Fire Chief John Waas said authorities were conducting a very extensive probe of the fire.

"It's like a big puzzle. We're piecing things together, but we're not anywhere near being able to determine any figures," Waas said.

INVESTIGATORS refused to speculate on a probable cause, saying extreme damage to the building prohibited them from ruling out any possibility.

"For an arson report to be justified, the state has to prove it's an incendiary fire. All fires are assumed to be accidental until proved otherwise by physical evidence," Helzer said.

"And due to the condition of the hotel, we're not going to find much physical evidence."

Chief Robert Patterson of the city Fire Prevention Unit echoed Helzer's statement, saying the main clues lay with people who witnessed the fire.

"That's all really we have to go on," Patterson said.

Hispanic group breaks from MEChA, forms own Union

Some former members of MEChA, a Chicano student organization, have formed a Hispanic Student Union (HSU) to meet the needs of the Hispanic student at K-State, according to Mary Avila de Gaudette, HSU president.

Avila de Gaudette said MEChA was not meeting the needs of some Hispanic students because the Chicano and Hispanic cultures are too different to belong to one organization.

"To clear all rumors, HSU is not a cast-off of MEChA or NAISB (Native American Indian Student Body). We have and want to form our own entity. The difference between us lies in our cultural and historical backgrounds," she said.

"Our history and amount of Spanish influence are completely different. There are some of us who are looking for and need to hold onto our roots," said Roberto Rosales, HSU faculty advisor.

Teresa Guillen, president of MEChA, said MEChA couldn't represent all Hispanics at K-State because different cultures are too diverse.

"I don't see all those different Hispanic cultures coming together under one organization. We've always been open to all K-State students and their cultures, but we can't do everything, not be ourselves," Guillen said.

"If MEChA is not meeting their needs, then they need to form a new group," said Antonia Pigno, MEChA advisor.

"All misunderstandings have been resolved. It was understood at allocations that MEChA was a Chicano organization. Its main purpose is to deal with the Chicano Mexican-American situation at K-State and in America," Pigno said.

Minority issues draw attention of candidates

By MARY WOOD
Staff Writer

Advising and minority involvement in administrative and faculty positions were some of the issues discussed by candidates for student body president during an open forum sponsored by the Black Student Union last night in the K-State Union.

Presidential candidates Sam Brownback, Ted Knopp, Bernard Shaw, Cindy Thomas and Stan Watt answered questions concerning minority issues and problems at K-State.

The candidates agreed that the foremost issues confronting minority students were the advising system, administrative areas, discrimination in grading and creating a more welcome atmosphere.

Brownback said one of the primary issues confronting minorities is the lack of minority awareness and the need to provide a center to make minorities more welcome on campus.

A willingness to select minority members to his cabinet is one method of implementing minority awareness, Brownback said.

KNOPP SAID he would work to appoint blacks and other minorities to non-traditional roles in the University community.

Recruiting minority people to replace administrative vacancies is a top priority, Knopp said.

Shaw said his primary goal would be a crackdown on racism starting on the college level with University administrators.

"We can't raise the level of education until we work on the attitude of people," he said.

Shaw said he opposed the idea of a minority house because it would divide the campus and would also be hard to receive federal funding for a center.

Thomas proposes an ethnic studies degree at K-State to promote employment of minority faculty, as a way to alleviate racism in academics.

"The only way to alleviate racism in academics is to make changes at the top," Thomas said. Hiring more black, Indian and Chicano faculty would help solve the problem, she said.

K-Staters chosen to study farming methods in Russia

Two K-State students have been chosen to participate in an agricultural exchange program with the Soviet Union beginning March 7, 1978.

Alan Atwood, senior in agricultural economics, and James Schesser, graduate in crop protection, will begin the exchange program with three months of orientation in Washington, D.C. before traveling to the Soviet Union.

The Young Agriculture Student Program provides an opportunity for young agricultural specialists from the U.S. and the Soviet Union to observe and study agricultural technology in another country, Atwood said.

"I had been going through applications and interviews since the first of November," Atwood said. "I never thought they would really choose me out of all the others who applied."

THOUSANDS of students applied for the program from across the U.S., but twelve were chosen to participate, Atwood said.

"I felt like I had very little chance of making it because of the quality of the other people who applied," he said.

One of the qualifications needed in persons chosen for the program is the ability to communicate well, Atwood said.

This skill is necessary because the participants will live with Russian families and work on their farms. They will also be attending the Russian Agricultural Academy each day, Atwood said.

The orientation in Washington, D.C. will include basic classes in the Russian language.

The students will leave for the Soviet Union on June 1 to begin their study of Russian agriculture, he said.

"I think this program is great because the United States and Russia should learn to live together—they aren't going to get rid of each other," Atwood said.

Cancer Society smokes out plea for tobacco regulation

NEW YORK (AP)—A national commission on smoking on Tuesday called for governmental regulation of the tobacco industry, which quickly said that it feels too heavily regulated already.

The American Cancer Society, which set up the commission, and spokesman for the Tobacco Institute, the industry group, held back-to-back press conferences to make their arguments.

The industry has seldom been as aggressive regarding tobacco sales.

The National Commission on Smoking and Public Policy told the cancer society board of directors that the tobacco industry was "virtually unregulated" and "unaccountable to any department or agency of government for the content of its products or the health consequences of their use."

RECOMMENDATIONS for a broad new program to reduce cigarette smoking were based in part, the society said, on testimony received from more than 300 citizens from all 50 states during forums in eight cities last March through June.

Commenting on this, William

Kloepfer Jr., senior vice president of the Tobacco Institute, said the institute taped and filmed the forums in Los Angeles, Denver, Seattle, St. Louis, Chicago, Boston, Atlanta and Philadelphia.

"We're at the end of a road show today and it almost made it to Broadway a couple of blocks away," he said.

DR. CALIGARI

THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI has often been cited as the foremost example of expressionistic cinema. A bit of Edgar Allen Poe and medieval folklore punctuate the plot, which begins in a tiny German town. It is the story of murder and madness, kidnapping and suspense. A series of murders occur, predicted by a fortune-telling somnambulist. Caligari falls under suspicion. Said film critic Arthur Knight, "To suggest that what we see are the ravings of a madman, Wiene deliberately adopted stylized settings—great angular shadows painted a deep black, streets and walls and sky all starkly white . . . (actor Krauss) creates a figure of such sinister malignance as has rarely been equalled on the screen . . . a unique picture . . . its influence was inestimable . . ."

Sororities tighten security after Florida State killings

By STEVE THOMPSON
Collegian Reporter

Since the January 15 killing of two Florida State coeds at the Chi Omega sorority house, there has been a growing concern for increased security measures at K-State sororities.

Patti Pastrick, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, said news of the killing prompted the sorority to lock its front door 24 hours a day. Girls must have a key to get in, she said.

Two sorority members are assigned to check all doors and windows at 11 every night, Pastrick said.

Alice Alioto, president of Kappa Delta sorority, said each member has a special card key which opens a back door of the Kappa Delta house. She said the front door is often open but shouldn't be.

ALIOTO said the Florida killings present a threat to all K-State living groups.

"It could happen almost anywhere," she said.

Alioto said she would like to see the front door of the Kappa Delta house operated by a card key system so the house could be locked 24 hours a day.

Christine Aalbrecht, president of Chi Omega sorority, said all doors and windows of the Chi Omega house are locked at 7 p.m. and are checked again at midnight.

Sorority members have keys to the back door and if a girl loses her key, the lock is changed and new keys are issued, she said.

Aalbrecht said since the Florida killings, members are considering keeping all doors locked 24 hours a day.

Kathy Reed, president of Alpha Chi Omega sorority, said they have locked their doors at 6 every night since the Florida killings. Girls must use their keys to get in after 6 p.m.

REED said the incident really "woke up" the girls.

"We are also stressing that girls don't go out by themselves," she said. "If they are on campus and need a ride home, they can call the house and get one."

Reed said if the girls are cautious and keep the doors locked, that should be enough security.

"If somebody wants to get in, they're going to get in, whether the doors are locked or not," she said.

Barbara Robel, president of Panhellenic Council, said she recommended the 24 hour lock-up policy to all K-State sororities shortly after the Florida incident.

BEYOND the 24 hour lock-up, not much more can be done, Robel said.

Robel did say the sororities are on the beat of both the campus police and Riley County police.

K-State fraternities contacted, Lambda Chi Alpha, Delta Sigma Phi, Delta Chi and Tau Kappa Epsilon, said they have less fear of such a threat and the Florida killings have not affected their security measures.

Jerry Lilly, assistant to the vice president for student affairs and advisor to fraternities, said fraternities should increase their security, but not because of this particular incident.

Lilly said a fraternity is a "home-away-from-home," and it should be treated as such and be locked 24 hours a day to protect people and property.

PRESSURE COOKER... K-State's Gayla Williams (14) applies defensive pressure to Sandy Smith (21) during the 'Cats 84-63 triumph over Wichita State last night in Ahearn Field House.

K-State guns down Wichita State, 84-63

By KEVIN BAHNER
Asst. Sports Editor

Good shooting has been known to destroy any type of defense. The K-State women's basketball team proved that last night as they knifed the Wichita State Shocker's, 84-63, in Ahearn Field House.

After opening the game sluggishly, and scoring only 10 points in the first seven minutes, the 'Cats warmed up and finished the first half by hitting 21-of-36 shots from the field for 58 percent. K-State led convincingly, 51-23, at halftime.

Sara Hackerott put the 'Cats on top to stay with 12:07 left in the first half when she stole the ball and drove the length of the court for a layup that put K-State up 12-11.

From that point on it was just a matter of time. The 'Cats took charge of the game and at one time led by as many as 35 when Gayla Williams hit Eileen Feeney on a fast break to make the score 66-31.

Sports

K-STATE'S first half offensive explosion was led by senior guard Kristi Short, who finished the game with 19 points, scoring 17 points in the first half while hitting on eight-of-nine shots from the field.

K-State Head Coach Judy Akers said she'd like to see Short take over the leadership role for her team. Short is the only senior on the young Wildcat club.

"Kristi took the ball right to them tonight," Akers said. "I'd like to see her get the offense to where we want it."

Two other 'Cats scored in double figures. Eileen Feeney scored 14 points and Beth Boggs added 17. Boggs also led K-State in the rebounding department with 11 rebounds.

WHAT the Shockers didn't do on defense, the 'Cats did, with an effective man-to-man defense that forced 28 Wichita State turnovers and played a major role in the Shockers hitting on only 35 percent of their shots in the first half.

Akers said the 'Cats sluggish start was caused by the tempo of the game.

"We got started a little slow," Akers said. "The tempo of the game was a little slower than in our last few outings."

Akers said she was not pleased with her team's first half shooting percentage.

"We missed some easy shots in the first half."

The win evened the 'Cats overall record at 12-12 and allowed them to remain atop the state conference with a 2-0 mark.

ISU tonight, Evans set to replace Meely

By the time Mike Evans takes his fifth or sixth shot tonight he will probably have set a new Big Eight scoring record. Individually, Evans needs just six points to break the mark held by Colorado's Cliff Meely.

As a team, Evans and the K-State Wildcats will be hoping to improve on their 3-4 conference mark as they open the second half of the Big Eight season by hosting the Iowa State Cyclones in Ahearn Field House tonight at 7:35.

The 'Cats stand 12-7 overall and are in a three-way tie with Oklahoma and Missouri for fourth place in the conference race.

The Cyclones, the surprise team of the Big Eight, are 6-1 and tied for first place in the conference with an 11-8 overall record.

EARLIER this season in Ames, Iowa State defeated the 'Cats, 82-77. The Cyclones were powered by Andrew Parker's 27 points, Dean Uthoff's 14 rebounds and 58.7 percent shooting by the team. Curtis Redding was the 'Cats leading scorer tallying 31 points.

K-State leads the series with the Cyclones 94-47. Iowa State has not won in Manhattan since 1968.

Parker leads the Cyclones and the Big Eight in scoring with a 23.2 average. Teammates Uthoff and Bob Fowler follow with averages of 13.5 and 13.3, respectively.

Uthoff has been in the top two in rebounding in the nation and has led the conference all year with a 14 rebound per game average.

K-State's junior varsity, 5-3 on the season, will play Kansas City Community College in a 5:15 preliminary contest.

Rolando coltish on defense offensively he's silky smooth

By LEANN WILCOX
Collegian Reporter

With flailing arms and giant strides, Rolando Blackman plays defense like a colt frisking in a pasture.

But when he gets the ball in his hands, there's a change. He becomes super smooth, which may be why his teammates sometimes call him "Silk".

Blackman, a freshman from William E. Grady High School in Brooklyn, New York, chose K-State from a list of schools trying to recruit him which included Centenary in Louisiana, Syracuse and Marquette.

Why K-State?

"Mostly because of the super people around here. They are looking to help you all the time."

He said he also likes the coaching staff and the winning tradition.

"Coach Jack Hartman knows exactly what he is talking about," Blackman said.

"He treats you like you're his own son."

Post-season tournament tickets

Ticket applications for the 1978 Big Eight Post-Season Basketball Tournament in Kansas City, March 3 and 4, will be available at the Ahearn Field House ticket windows immediately following Wednesday night's games between K-State and Iowa State.

The ticket packages (for both nights) are priced at $14.80 plus 50 cents for handling. There will be no refunds. There are no single game tickets.

"If you do what he tells you, you'll win, that's for sure."

ANOTHER REASON for his coming to K-State was playing time.

"I didn't want to sit down on any bench."

"I didn't plan on starting. I just kept working and working on it. Starting is frosting on the cake."

There is a difference, Blackman said, between high school and college ball.

"Talent works in high school, but you have to have know-how, a sense for the game, in college."

Blackman is a forward for K-State, a change from being a center in high school.

"I like facing the basket. You get to see more and do more," Blackman said.

Blackman has averaged 10 points and seven rebounds per game, making him the third leading scorer and rebounder for the 'Cats.

Blackman said he seems to have a knack for being in the right place at the right time to pick up easy baskets and rebounds.

"I try to guess the most logical place it is going to bounce," he said.

Though statistics are important, more important is the enthusiasm Blackman brings to the court with him.

Blackman said he is defense-minded, which is evident by his excited defensive play.

"If I don't look too good on defense I don't feel too good."

I feel a lot better if I can stop my man—make him have a bad day, everyday."

Blackman hopes to land a professional contract someday.

"I plan on it. But just in case it doesn't work out I'll have something I can go into right away."

That something is accounting. He had a 3.0 grade point average last semester and said he is serious about studying.

"I'd like to be known as one of the outstanding players in K-State history and also as a good student. I hope to be recognized as both."

Police dragnet hits Ahearn in wild search for murderer

parked about 20 feet away from where the man ran.

The uniformed security officer directed two plainclothed men to the northwest entrance of Ahearn where the man entered the building, Bishop said.

Approximately 30 officers were called to Ahearn, armed with shotguns.

Persons in the upstairs offices of Ahearn locked the doors and remained inside until the police left.

Police cleared parts of the building, escorting two to three persons out at a time. They then searched the building, but the search yielded nothing.

At about 5:30 p.m. police entered the K-State Union following a report that the man was inside, but no one was apprehended.

AN UNCONFIRMED report stated that the man left Ahearn through a south door shortly before police arrived.

The man is believed to be on foot and may be leaving the Manhattan area, LaFond said.

The RCPD has issued an all-points-bulletin for Williams and have set up road blocks around Manhattan, according to LaFond.

Williams is described as a black, in his early 20s, wearing a brown knit stocking cap with a bill, light colored trousers and a reddish-brown leather jacket.

Murphy fills concert billing with 'America'

By PEGGY PATCHEN
Collegian Reporter

The Union Program Council (UPC) announced Wednesday "America" will perform at 8 p.m. March 3 in Ahearn Fieldhouse. Michael Murphy will perform the warm-up for the group.

Reserved seating tickets are $7, $6.50 and $6 and will be sold primarily on a mail-order basis, with no more than 10 tickets per order.

Orders should include buyer's preference of seating section, number of tickets desired, name, address, and phone number, along with a check or money order payable to the K-State Union.

Orders will be filled randomly according to the date of the postmark. If the desired section is sold out, the next best seats will be sent with a refund for the difference, if any.

Tickets may be picked up beginning Wednesday, Feb. 22 at the K-State Union Ticket Office.

Tickets will be returned by mail to non-Manhattan residents. Remaining tickets will be available at the K-State Union Ticket Office, Ahearn Field House, and area merchants Feb. 22 through Mar. 3.

The seating capacity for the concert will be 9,726, according to Rob Cieslicki, program adviser for the UPC concerts committee.

The concert will feature a hanging sound system.

"We've never hung sound before," said Irene Parsons, concerts committee coordinator. "It should cut out the problem of blocking people's view."

Negotiations for a concert featuring Jackson Browne are only in the preliminary stages and nothing has been established yet, Cieslicki said. However, Browne has tentatively scheduled a concert in Kansas City during the third week in March.

Committee learns pros, cons of death penalty bill

TOPEKA—Lacking much of the emotion that has characterized state legislative hearings on the death penalty, the Kansas senate Federal and State Affairs Committee Wednesday heard proponents and opponents of two bills designated to reinstate capital punishment in Kansas.

See related story, p. 20

A K-State philosophy professor was among 16 persons who testified for or against a bill which was passed by the House earlier in the session and a similar senate bill which would reinstate the death penalty in the state.

John Exdell, assistant professor of philosophy at K-State, said he was opposed to the death penalty because of the dangerous essence of such a piece of legislation.

Exdell said there is always a chance of an innocent man being executed. He said capital punishment has not been shown as a deterrent to crime, and therefore its use as a punishment proves nothing that couldn't be proven by lesser penalties.

"They must show that punishment is justified," he said.

THE HOUSE bill would impose a death penalty on first degree murders and make it necessary for a new jury to decide the sentencing. The Senate version doesn't have the sentencing provision.

"All persons are creatures of God and the state does not have the right to take a life," said Barbara MacCracken, a catholic nun from Atchison.

Several of the religious opposers said capital punishment doesn't deter crime, in addition to its being contrary to the teachings of the Bible.

Carter says he would send U.S. troops to defend canal

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter said Wednesday night he would not hesitate to send U.S. troops to defend the Panama Canal—"and I have no doubt that even in sustained combat we would be successful."

But Carter said the treaty to yield control of the waterway to Panama in the year 2000 would diminish the risk of any need for armed intervention to defend it.

Urging public support for Senate ratification of the Panama Canal treaty, Carter's firm pledge confronted one of the major points raised by opponents who complain that the pact does not spell out American defense rights.

That opposition argument deals with the situation after the year 2000 when the canal would be under Panamanian control when Carter, of course, would not be president.

In a nationally broadcast and televised "fireside chat," the second in his year-old presidency, Carter said approval of the treaty is "in the highest national interest of the United States and will strengthen our position in the world."

HE SAID opposition to the treaty, due to come up for debate in the Senate next week, "is based on misunderstanding and misinformation."

The president said, "This is not a partisan issue." He argued that ratification will strengthen U.S. security interests, improve trade opportunities, honor a commitment to keep the canal open to world commerce at a fair price and "demonstrate that as a large and powerful country we are able to deal fairly and honorably with a proud but smaller sovereign nation."

Much of Carter's talk was devoted to posing questions often raised by treaty critics and providing his own answers.

For example, he said, many Americans argue "we bought it, we paid for it, it's ours."

Victims of MD receive bump 'aid' from dancers

By MAKY JO WOBKER
Collegian Reporter

The K-Staters bumping at Mother's Worry aren't dancing for their health. But they are dancing for the health of seven-year-old Jill Peterson, this year's state muscular dystrophy poster child, and others like her.

Thirteen couples started the 1978 Muscular Dystrophy Bump-A-Thon at 7 a.m. Tuesday. They plan to keep dancing until 10 p.m. Thursday.

The dancers rest only ten minutes each hour, day and night. There are no lunch breaks and participants eat during the hourly rest periods.

Dancers are recruited from greek houses, residence halls and are off-campus students.

"The dancers are responsible for securing pledges for themselves. But the group they represent also secures pledges," Norma Graham, a program coordinator for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, said.

THE GROUP that raises the most money will win a traveling trophy called a "Muscular Dystrophy," said Fred Lechner, co-owner of Mother's Worry and an advisor for the Bump-A-Thon committee.

"It will signify that they raised the most money and it will give them first option of taking a part in sponsoring the event the following year," he said.

Last year's Bump-A-Thon raised $12,500. The official goal this year is to "dance one hour longer and raise one dollar more" than last year, according to Steve Deck, junior in agricultural economics and Bump-A-Thon committee chairman.

"I have a lot of confidence in the campus. I think we'll raise $15,000. I'm hoping," he said.

Should K-State raise that amount, the couple who brings in the most money in the Bump-A-Thon will receive an expense-paid trip to this year's Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon.

ORGANIZATION is the key word in planning a Bump-A-Thon and special consideration must be given to the dancers' needs.

Then contests and other fund-

Foes, friends of death penalty speak

The proponents, mostly enforcement officers used moral arguments to state their case for the penalty.

Chief John Woody of the Salina Police Department refuted arguments that the death penalty isn't used for vengeful purposes.

"We're going to eventually have to stop this killing," Woody said. "It's not vengeance. When you go by those cemeteries, it's justice you're talking about."

WOODY SAID that since Kansas discontinued the death penalty in 1972, the murder rate in the state has been higher than it was before capital punishment was abolished.

Rep. Kent Roth (D-Ellinwood), a sponsor of the House bill said he was in favor of the punishment because it would keep a person from killing more than one person, figuring he had nothing to lose.

Roth, however, expressed objections to the portion of the bill which states that a new jury would decide the sentencing for the murder. Roth said the new jury would perhaps not be familiar enough with the events during the first portion of the trial to make an adequate judgment on sentencing.

Traditionally, the Catholic Church has accepted capital punishment as the state's obligation to protect the common good, said Father Daniel Scheetz, chaplain at St. Isidore's Catholic Church.

But Scheetz said modern teaching tends to disagree with older teachings.

Williams arrested for two murders

Police in Topeka arrested Albert Williams, 22, of Junction City at 11 a.m. Wednesday. Williams was wanted in the Tuesday killing of 24-year-old Pamela Parker at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce office.

Williams was arrested in connection with a fatal shooting of a Topeka woman according to Riley County Police Inspector John LaFond.

Williams will be charged with first degree murder in both Manhattan and Topeka, LaFond said.

According to LaFond, Williams fled the RCPD through Ahearn Field House Tuesday afternoon. Williams entered the fieldhouse on the west side and must have immediately exited on the east side, LaFond said.

The suspect was reported to have left Manhattan at about 5 p.m. headed toward Topeka in a borrowed 1964 blue Buick.

LaFond declined comment on whether charges would be brought against the person who loaned Williams the car.

"Prudentially and historically, it does not seem that capital punishment can be justified," Scheetz said. "One would have to justify capital punishment on the basis of the reasons for which punishment exists."

SCHETZ OPPOSES capital punishment because it is going too far and he said he represents the thinking of most modern theologians.

Because capital punishment "obviously does nothing to rehabilitate the offender" or doesn't act as a deterrent, it doesn't serve the purpose it is defended to serve, he said.

"If we're able to get to the moon, we're able to get to some kind of rehabilitation service," he said.

The committee probably will act on the House bill because of the large margin favoring it in the House of Representatives, said Edward Reilly (R-Leavenworth), committee chairman.

If the committee fails to resolve the slight differences in the House and senate bills, it can act on the senate bill, Reilly said.

Israeli oranges poisoned

THE HAGUE, The Netherlands—Western Europe issued an alert Wednesday for Israeli-grown oranges poisoned with mercury in a purported Arab-Palestinian scheme to sabotage Israel's economy.

The Palestine Liberation Organization denied that any Palestinians were responsible as claimed in a letter to the Dutch and West German governments from "The Arab Revolutionary Army Palestinian Commando."

U.S. government officials said there was no evidence that any of the tainted fruit had reached the United States, and the Israeli Embassy in Washington claimed none of the oranges were for sale in U.S. stores.

Five Dutch children were hospitalized for mercury poisoning last week after they ate the contaminated oranges and became ill, the Dutch Health Ministry reported. Doctors pumped out the children's stomachs and sent the youngsters home a few days later completely recovered.

Heart patients go home

BOSTON—Many heart attack patients could safely be sent home from the hospital after one week instead of the current average of more than two weeks, aiding their psychological recovery and saving the nation $360 million in medical costs annually, a study says.

The researchers concluded that people who have had heart attacks can go home after about seven days if they have not suffered serious complications by their fourth day in the hospital. Ordinarily, these patients stay in the hospital an average of almost 16 days.

Besides having smaller medical bills, the heart attack victims will be psychologically better able to resume their normal lives if they spend less time in hospitals, concluded the study, which was conducted at the Duke University Medical Center.

Kiddie books beside porno

RALEIGH, N.C.—A loophole in a new anti-pornography law is allowing adult bookstore owners to carry on as usual by adding innocent books like "Trip to Toyland" to shelves that also carry racier reading such as "Bicentennial Bondage" and "Red Hot Wives."

The state law that became effective Jan. 1 makes illegal the operation of more than one type of sex-related business in a single building. Legislators had hoped that if they could end the practice among adult businesses of offering a multiplicity of sex-related material in one store, this in turn would eliminate the profit from adult businesses.

But the law defines an adult book store as one that has a "preponderance" of adult books—and therein lies the loophole.

"It's a loophole, there's no doubt about it," said Lt. K.J. Johnson, head of the Raleigh vice squad. "The stores are cutting the porn down to 49 percent, with the rest being Girl Scout books, magazines 10 years old, comic books—things like that."

Kansas wheat to Vietnam

WICHITA—A shipment of 40,000 bushels of Kansas wheat was dedicated Wednesday by church leaders before its departure to Houston and eventually Vietnam.

Twelve railroad hopper cars, containing wheat either donated by farmers or purchased through cash contributions, comprised the third shipment in recent days by CROP, the Community Hunger Appeal for Church World Service.

Oklahoma farmers earlier sent 61 carloads to Houston and Nebraska contributed 12. Minnesota, South Dakota and North Dakota will furnish 25 carloads to make a total of 110 carloads that will make up a shipload scheduled to sail March 4.

raising activities must be planned in order to generate interest.

One such program involves the presidents of the greek houses and residence halls.

"All the house presidents or the floor presidents, in the case of the dorms, actually spend a half-day tied down to a wheel chair. It's inconvenient for them, but the idea is that muscular dystrophy is inconvenient," Lechner said.

Some familiar personalities are expected to appear at the Bump-A-Thon, Deck said.

"Governor Bennett will be here Thursday afternoon, along with President Acker."

Some state legislators are expected to attend as well as K-State's new football coach, Jim Dickey, and K-State track coach, Mike Ross.

PLEASE HELP!!! BEAT M.D.!!!

I HATE PEOPLE. ESPECIALLY CHILDREN.

I like to sneak up on them when they are only two or three or four years old, when their bodies are straight and healthy and full of bounce and fun, full of life and joy, when they're saying, "Look at me! Look at me! See how high I can jump!" and "Look at me, Mom, watch me catch the ball! Look at me, Dad, see how fast I can run!" Those are the little ones I like to pull down. Because I hate people. Especially children.

I like to watch little children trip and fall, just at that look-at-me stage when they're so proud of their first steps, fall and rise slowly, every day a little more slowly, until finally they have to hang on to a chair to pull themselves to a standing position. It makes me laugh when they can't stand up without having to first bend down and clutch their ankles, and then force their hands up their legs, their knees, their thighs until they are shakily, momentarily erect. And the more they struggle with what ought to be the most natural of functions, the better I like it. Because I hate people. Especially children.

I laugh when they can't turn over in bed, knowing that the minds inside their helpless heads are normal and keen and longing to break out into the freedom of the health-muscled world. And, finally, when they haven't a single muscle left, not even strength for the little act of independence of sipping liquid through a straw, when the inevitable downhill slide into helplessness leaves them without even the final muscle for the final breath—for breathing calls on muscles, too—then I say, "Good, I've done my work well. I've trapped these children in the most mysterious and hopeless disease known to man."

Or should I say unknown to man? Let man hurl himself into the galaxies and take snapshots of the moon but, down here on this earth where I prowl, he is still unable to find a cure for this scourge of little children. For I am MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY, the hater of people, especially children, and I dare you to stop me. It will take more money, more time, more science and more love than you have yet been willing to give. Yes, I am MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY. I hate people, especially children. And I dare you to stop me. I dare you!

Opinions

Collegian will not endorse candidates

With less than two weeks remaining before the student body presidential election, speculation has centered as to whether or not the Collegian would endorse a candidate.

Many people have said that it is the responsibility of the newspaper to make its recommendations as to who is best qualified to become K-State's next student body president.

Other people have argued that the Collegian has the power to sway students who otherwise would not pay attention to the campaign, and this is unfair to all candidates.

The Collegian had fun last year when it endorsed Curtis Redding and this tongue-in-cheek humor had a disastrous effect on the seriousness of the election.

THE COLLEGIAN realizes the seriousness of such an election. The students will not only be electing a new president, but they will also be electing a spokesman for the students to the Kansas Board of Regents.

In a time when the issue of a new fieldhouse is still undecided, it will require an experienced and well-respected president to help legislators realize how much K-State needs the new facility.

The candidates this election have demonstrated excellent qualifications. They have attacked the issues and there is every indication that they will sustain their earnest drive through the electionns.

But they are going to be confronted with at least one major problem and that is students who don't give a damn about the election, which is nothing new. They would much rather remain apathetic and let someone else vote and this often results in a very small majority actually casting their votes.

THE COLLEGIAN, in times of election, is often looked to as the impetus for students to help them decide who is the best candidate.

This election, however, the Collegian will not be used as a crutch. It will not be used to provide the easy way out for apathetic students.

To ensure that students elect a new president by their own accord, the Collegian will not endorse a candidate.

We will present the issues and the candidates' responses, but the students will have to do their own homework and make their own decisions.

A lot of parking woes

There is a rational solution to the game of roulette that we commonly know as the "K-State parking problem."

By the term "rational solution," I do not mean constructing a million-dollar parking garage in Flush, Kan. Nor do I mean doubling the price of parking permits to finance a hundred thousand dollar per year shuttlebus service from KSU Stadium to the inner campus so the men in Edwards Hall won't have to hitchhike to class.

Included among the non-rational solutions is banning parking permits to students, faculty and staff living within five blocks of campus; banning all parking within five blocks of campus and replacing Anderson Hall with a concrete slab (up to this point I've avoided saying the Student Senate Task Force on Traffic and Parking wasted a year—but the thought has crossed my mind).

WHEN I say "rational" I mean building a 425-car lot North of Weber Hall for dormitory resident parking, as proposed by the K-State Traffic and Parking Committee.

The $39,000 lot would temporarily solve most of K-State's problems related to parking.

The first benefit to be enjoyed from this solution would be that K-State would be rid of the constant complaining of Manhattan city officials concerning the parking problem.

Since Jan., 1976, the city has been riding K-State officials to clear the city streets of student's cars. Most of these cars, which are parked for several days without being moved, belong to dormitory residents who can't get a parking permit or find it's cheaper (and closer) to park on the streets east of campus.

AFTER TWO YEARS it's time K-State did more than listen to the city's complaints and their suggestions. The proposed parking lot site north of Weber Hall would give these students a place to park.

However, it would be important that the city enforce some kind of parking regulation east of campus or students will still park there.

The proposed lot would also ease up parking close to campus. I realize a survey taken last November showed the lots near West Stadium and east of McCain Auditorium usually had some empty stalls (with the stadium lot having as many as 100 empty spaces, at times).

Unfortunately, the survey never had to find a place to park at 10:20 a.m.

Between 9:25 and 10:30 a.m. the Union, McCain and Ackert Hall lots are full. West Stadium has some empty spaces on Sunset Avenue, but there's also a lot of cars parked illegally. If the cars were parked right, the lot would be allowed to fill up.

THOSE SAME LOTS, which are considered close to campus parking, are also used for storage parking by dorm residents. By moving those cars which are there for storage, more than 100 parking spots would be opened up.

Granted, it wouldn't guarantee a front-row parking spot—but it's a start.

Letters to the editor

Mitchell's letter 'preposterous'

Editor,

In response to Mr. Mitchell's letter concerning the point that other living groups tried to imitate Greek organizations, I would like to throw in my two bits and say that this could be no further from the truth.

If we had wanted to join a Greek organization we probably would have done so in the first place.

As far as imitating them, who would want to?

However, if anyone would like to remodel Haymaker Hall to house a Greek organization, consider these suggestions:

1. Knock out all of the walls on one of the floors and make it into one big bedroom where we could all sleep together and tell bedtime stories late at night.

2. Knock out the walls on another floor to make it into one giant closet to store all our striped shirts, painter's pants and penny loafers.

These are just a couple of ideas that could be helpful in the organization of a greek house—more ideas and blueprints can be obtained from the Manhattan City Building.

As far as other greek activities go, the last time I remember being forced to go to a study hall was when I was in 3rd grade.

We all had certain times we had to study and then, when we got through (if we were good little boys and girls), we got some milk and cookies.

Then we got to take a nap on a little rug that we brought from home.

I was wondering—is that a greek procedure also?

If everyone wants to act like the greeks, why is it that you never see anyone else running around like yard apes stringing toilet paper from trees like our greek friends.

Don't get me wrong, I'm sure there are a few normal people in greek organizations even though they seem to have eluded us so far (maybe they wear their hair different).

Finally, I would like to say this letter does blow things out of proportion to a slight degree, but, after all, what kind of response can be expected when all there is to work with is Mr. Mitchell's preposterous letter.

Declaration of independents

Editor,

This Thursday night, about 200 of us have been invited to get together and party!

We plan on having a great time on our own, and in no way do we plan to imitate the greek system.

Mr. Mitchell's letter, which appeared in the Jan. 31 Collegian, states otherwise, however.

Our floor function, planned through Floor Council, is designed to bring residents together to enjoy themselves. The Floor Council is set up to meet student's needs and to act in a way representing these needs for this year.

It was not formed to carry on a tradition nor to imitate the Greek system.

The residence hall system is composed of a large number of individuals living together as separate entities.

We enjoy meeting everyone on our floor through University activities (intramurals, etc.) and also through our own happenings (lobby rap sessions, Spring Fling, All Hall Functions, etc.).

We are free to enjoy ourselves as individuals, not needing to imitate anyone or conform to set norms.

It was unfortunate that Mr. Mitchell was so intimidated by a previous letter that he generalized it as an attack on the greek system—and then insecurely proceeded to voice an extremely biased, uninformed opinion against a third party.

For some reason we still believe we're acting as organized individuals and that there are still those in the greek system who recognize the residence halls as a unique system, offering a separate way of life.

Residence hall living not imitation of greeks

Editor,

Re: Scott Mitchell's letter which appeared in the Jan. 31 Collegian (insinuating that residence halls try to imitate fraternities.)

Scott, do you actually believe that we want to be like you?

You seem to be deluded with your feelings of self-importance.

Our functions—Spring Fling, floor meetings and elections—are not imitations of greeks.

If we wanted to imitate you we would have many changes to make. We would give up our independence. Most of us have grown up enough to leave our parents at home and not seek the authority of the fraternity as an artificial parent to tell us when to study or clean "the house."

We do not have to debase ourselves through a pledge program in order to win the approval of our older "brothers."

If an upperclassman confronted any self-respecting freshman in a residence hall and told him to make his bed, to study on a Friday night, or to clean the bathroom, he would be laughed at.

The residence hall freshman is prepared to participate in a democracy while the pledge programs of many fraternities encourage the adherence to ridiculous rules without question (which is more suited to a fascist right-wing dictatorship).

Our meetings are not copies of yours.

Yes, Scott, even you could attend our most sacred meetings and have your say.

We seriously doubt that we could attend one of your cult-like Wednesday night gatherings.

At the recent Ford All-Hall Function, numerous fraternity members were in attendance, drinking beer (which we paid for) and generally taking advantage of the situation. However, we could never attend a greek function.

We believe that living in a residence hall exposes us to a wide variety of people rather than the rugby-shirted, robot-like, "yes" men of the stereotyped frat.

We realize that the above statements are not applicable to all fraternities or fraternity members—but the statements aren't any worse than what Scott Mitchell said about residence halls.

Bennett sympathizes with farmers

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. Robert Bennett said Wednesday he believes the Carter administration has until spring planting time to convince the nation's farmers it is moving to help them, or a lot of them are going to go under financially.

"I think the administration is going to have to show the flag and do something...before spring planting. What farmers want now is some effective action on the part of the administration to show they know what the problem is," the Kansas Republican said.

Bennett commented at a news conference he called the day after he met with President Carter, Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland and Robert Strauss, the president's international trade negotiator, at the White House. Nine other Midwest governors also attended the session, the third for Bennett at which the farm crisis was discussed.

BENNETT TOLD statehouse reporters he was encouraged this time. "I think something was accomplished," he said.

"I think we did get across the point that we can't have a cheap food policy and keep our farmers producing the food and fiber this nation and the world needs.

"I think we made the point we need a well-rounded farm program, and that we can't just sugar coat the bitter pill the farmers are now experiencing.

"I think they will do more than just sympathize."

Bennett said farmers have got to have incentives and hope to plant this spring. Many of them, he noted, have been hanging on by their financial fingernails.

If action is not forthcoming, the governor said, "I think what you're going to see is that, little by little, if something isn't done, more and more farms are going to go on the block.

"...It grows sort of like a cancer, and more and more people are affected by it."

BENNETT SAID the governors were told the administration would work to win congressional approval of increased loan levels on farm commodities, a set-aside program to take some land out of agricultural production, some modification in target prices and loan prices, and increases in federal funds for the nation's export programs, such as Food for Peace.

Bennett said the administration also promised to make greater efforts to negotiate trade agreements more favorable to the U.S.

Asked if it was realistic to expect

Carter to commit more money to farm programs when his proposed budget already faces a $60 billion deficit, Bennett replied, "I think there is enough money in the budget to come up with the relatively small amount needed to increase exports."

Reallocation cuts work-study funds

The Work Study Program at K-State will have less money to give students this year because of a lower reallocation of federal funds.

Each year the federal government provides money to state schools for student financial assistance. When some schools can't use all of the money they receive, the funds are reallocated to those schools with a greater need, according to Jim Upham, Student Financial Assistance (SFA) assistant director.

Last year Kansas State received approximately $100,000 of reallocated funds, Upham said, while this year SFA received $38,000.

Upham said that last year's funds were the largest amount the department has ever received. He also said that $38,000 was about average for the reallocated funds SFA usually receives.

Since 80 percent of the Work Study Program is government-funded, the program will be providing less support for students than last year, Upham said.

Past presidents' views vary

By BERNARD NORMAN
Collegian Reporter

John Ronnau is teaching a third grade bi-lingual class in Carlsbad, California.

Steve Doering and Joe Knopp are lawyers.

Pat Bosco is the Assistant Dean of Students at K-State. They all have one thing in common; they are all former K-State student body presidents.

The former politicians have varying opinions about issues that have been around campus for awhile and one of those issues is student apathy.

"I don't believe in the word 'apathy'. The word is a cop-out. People around K-State are not sitting on their hands," Bosco said.

BOSCO, who was elected student body president in 1970, said during his tenure the students were concerned about Vietnam and President Richard Nixon's visit to the campus.

"Students wanted to be active, especially in the areas of life that affect the quality of living. It was an exciting period. Forty-five percent of the student body voted in the run-off election and we had six candidates," Bosco said.

Chris Badger, who was elected student body president in 1976, agreed.

"I never found a group apathetic," Badger said.

Other past presidents expressed different views.

Ronnau, who was elected in 1972, said, "The apathy that was already there was beginning to set in."

Bernard Franklin, who was elected in 1975, said; "Apathy is always an issue. When I first came to K-State, the students were at the end of their dissention period, but some of it rubbed off on me, and even today I like to see things change."

FRANKLIN WAS recently appointed to the Kansas Board of Regents. He is a minister in Kansas City and Topeka and works for American Telephone and Telegraph in Kansas City.

The past presidents said other issues which concerned students included parking, fees, student services, teacher evaluations, recreational facilities and representation, not only through the SGA, but on all University levels.

Each said if they could relive their K-State experience, they would.

Mark Edelman, who was elected in 1974, said holding the office was an educational experience.

"I recommend it for anyone. If elected, you can see how administration decisions are made and carried out. It's more than a personal experience—it's a learning experience."

"I got a chance to observe administrators delegating authority. The office was a good confidence builder and it reinforced my idea that good leaders can influence change and not disillusion people," said Knopp, who was elected in 1973.

DOERING, who took office in Democratic idea baffles teenagers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly all teen-agers know who the president is, but for many that's where their knowledge of government stops. Less than half can name even one of their senators or representatives in Congress, a nationwide survey has found.

It found that among 17-year-olds, the ability to explain the basic concept of democracy declined from 86 percent to 74 percent.

More than 96 percent of both age groups could name the president, but only about 20 percent of the 13-year-olds and 48 percent of the 17-year-olds could name any of their representatives in Congress.

1973 after it was resigned by Ronnau, said, "There's no doubt about it, student politics helped me a lot."

Future plans for all presidents interviewed include careers in law, agriculture, education and politics.

"I want to stay with education, possibly go into child psychology, or my wife and I might return to Kansas to do some farming," Ronnau said.

Both Knopp and Doering said a future in politics is a possibility.

"My family and my career come first. In ten years or so, if I'm in the position to take a seat in the Senate or House of Representatives, I'll accept it," Knopp said.

"Right now I plan on finishing my education. When I'm through I'd like to work in the area of agriculture extension," said Edelman, who is attending Purdue University in Indiana.

Badger, who recently moved back to Manhattan, but still works in Topeka, said, "I'd like to work for K-State in some capacity. I'd like to help it grow and also help other students have that same good experience that I had."

Senate will consider issue calling for yearly elections

BY ANDREA CARVER
Collegian Reporter

A bill establishing the yearly election of Student Senate and another calling for a referendum for a new fieldhouse are among the legislation items to be considered by senate tonight at 7 o'clock in the Big 8 Room of the Union.

Under the yearly election bill, senate elections would be held the fourth full week of classes in spring semester. Currently, half of senate is elected in the fall and half in the spring.

If adopted, the bill would go into effect February 1979 with the senate elected in October 1977 being held over until February 1979.

A constitutional revision and by-laws change, the bill must be approved by three-fourths of senate and by two-thirds of the college councils.

CINDY THOMAS, senate chairman and a sponsor of the bill, said the productivity of senate committees would increase if the bill is passed because senators would have a longer time period to work together.

"It would help more people to get out and campaign and should help to increase the voter turnout because the elections would be held only once a year. It would also increase the commitment of the senators," Thomas said.

"On the whole, it would make a more efficient Student Senate," she said.

"This would bring consistency in the Student Senate which it's currently lacking," said Brian Rasette, business senior and sponsor of the bill.

SENATE WILL consider a bill calling for a referendum to vote on a fieldhouse proposal to raise full-

'Brother exchange' to promote unity

Fraternities at K-State will have a chance to participate in a two-week "brother exchange" program this month.

Each fraternity may submit one member's name to live in another fraternity from February 26 to March 10 and will receive a member from another participating fraternity during that time, according to Mitch Holthus, president of Interfraternity Council (IFC).

The deadline for submitting names is Friday in the IFC office in Holtz Hall 110B.

Names will be drawn by a random selection process, Holthus said.

Holthus said the program has never been tried in K-State fraternities.

"We adopted the program from the Panhellenic Council which does a similar thing called 'rotating roommates,'" he said.

"The purpose of it all is to promote unity among greeks. The best fraternity man is not the one who has zeal within the house but is the one who carries that zeal beyond his house to the (greek) system," Holthus said.

Jerry Lilly, assistant to the vice president for student affairs and advisor to fraternities, said many greeks haven't been in chapter houses other than their own.

"It's a worthy and worthwhile project and we need more of that kind of interaction among greek chapters," Lilly said.

time student fees $10 per semester and part-time student fees $5 per semester to help pay for a new fieldhouse.

Under the fieldhouse proposal, $3 million would be raised from student fees, $3 million from the Kansas legislature and $4 million from alumni and private donors. Construction on the fieldhouse would begin in 1981 and would be complete by 1983.

Senate will also consider a bill requiring the student body president to maintain seven hours undergraduate credit or six hours of graduate credit to remain in office.

Currently, a student body president is required to enroll in at least seven hours of undergraduate credit but is able to drop part or all of those hours.

"You really can't understand the students' problems if you're only taking one class," Thomas said.

Fieldhouse referendum bid to go before Senate tonight

By BERNARD NORMAN
Collegian Reporter

A bill calling for a referendum to raise full-time student fees $10 and part-time student fees $5 to help pay for a new fieldhouse will be discussed by Student Senate tonight, and some senators said they favor the issue to go to the student body.

The fieldhouse proposal, sponsored by Student Body President Terry Matlack, would begin the hike in student fees in fall 1978. Under the proposal, $3 million from the state legislature and $4 million from alumni and private donors.

Brad Henson, agriculture senator, said passage of the bill by senate means that senate favors the idea of the student body passing the proposal and doesn't necessarily mean senate favors the fieldhouse plan.

"At this time, I'm leaning against the bill. How come we can't get a new fieldhouse without the students paying for it? It seems like the students are being the patsies," Henson said.

"I'm in favor of the bill," said Mark Kinnaman, arts and sciences senator. "It's up to the students to vote whether or not they pay for a new fieldhouse."

"AS FAR as the bill goes, I'm in favor of it," said Anne Shearer, engineering senator. "We need to know if the students are in favor of helping to fund the fieldhouse."

"My first reaction is to vote 'yes' on the bill because of the student reaction I have received," said Joe Rossini, arts and sciences senator.

"I'm very much in favor of the bill," said Pat Sargent, student representative to faculty senate. "I'm in favor of students deciding whether or not they want to pay the $10 fee increase for a new fieldhouse."

"I think the students ought to vote. If the referendum fails, I don't think the bill should come back to student senate," Sargent said.

The fieldhouse proposal provides that any student money raised would go into Student Governing Association funds if the other $7 million isn't raised from other sources.

Max Knopp, Finance Committee chairman, said if the fieldhouse money did come to student government funds, it may be used to retire the bonds on the recreation complex faster.

To hold a referendum on the fieldhouse proposal, the bill calling for the referendum must be passed by a simple majority of senate.

The referendum for the fieldhouse proposal must be voted on by at least one-third of the student body and passed by a majority of the voters.

Paxson files as democratic nominee for state secretary

TOPEKA (AP)—Betty Paxson of Topeka, who announced last week in Dodge City that she is a candidate for Democratic nomination for secretary of state, filed Wednesday for that office.

She said in a statement issued in connection with that filing that she would base her campaign on the need for voting and registration improvements in Kansas.

Incumbent Republican Elwill Shanahan, who has held the secretary of state's office since April 1966, has not yet revealed whether she plans to seek re-election. If she decides to retire, her chief assistant, Jack Brier, is regarded as the leading contender for the GOP nomination.

'Strangers' gargle with flannel socks

Geez, I could kick myself. To think I've put off listening to punk rock-new wave music all this time. It's a good thing I listened to this album by "The Strangers," because now I know what others already knew—perversity is fun.

Ragtime

I played this record, "Iv Rattus Norvegicus," twice. (Not on the same day, though. I'm supposed to review records, not play martyr.) Both times brought on a big smile. I mean, how else can you listen to songs with a sledgehammer 4-4 beat, tunes so simple they could be played on a toy piano, and lyrics like this:

"Someday I'm gonna smack your face, someday I'm going to smack your face, somebody gonna call your bluff, somebody gonna treat you rough."

ACTUALLY, THE lyrics aren't all that offensive. That's because most of the time you can't understand them. The vocalist, and I use that word hesitantly, sounds like he gargled with an old flannel sock.

The high point (?) of this album is an eight-minute track called "Down in the Sewer." It's about this guy who finds himself in a sewer, obviously, with lots of empty Coke cans, and rats with sharp teeth and little white eyes and lots of diseases and...well, you get the idea.

In all fairness to The Strangers, their music is more ambitious than most new wave groups. The instrumentation, for example, is fuller, adding keyboards to the usual guitar, bass and drums.

Their songs are longer, too. Goups like "The Ramones" work in the 2½ minute format. The Strangers are generally in the four-minute category. Still, being king of the garbage heap only makes you a better class of garbage.

THIS IS ugly music, with voices and instruments both creating a hideous drone. There is no trace of humor, no feeling that these guys are putting us all on, and that worries me. Music without humanity is like sex with no emotions.

Listen to this album only if you live in an emotional vacuum or if your brain is permanently fried. If this is the future of rock 'n roll, I'll content myself by replaying my old Beach Boys and Little Richard records.

Front Row

W & W; basic redneck rock: booze, broads and baritone

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

"Waylon and Willie" is exactly what you'd expect from Waylon Jennings and Willie Nelson. It's basic redneck rock—very simple background music, with a little steel guitar and some predictable lyrics. In fact, every song seems to talk about the same old things; women, booze, and music, the basic staples of life in Luckenbach, Texas.

Jennings and Nelson have both enjoyed great success on recent solo albums ("Ol' Waylon" and "To Lefty From Willie"), and "Waylon and Willie" wisely varies little from their proven formula.

There is a danger, however, in not changing their songs enough. Some of the songs here sound just like their old ones. The songs are still enjoyable, but familiarity can breed contempt.

With that in mind, perhaps, Jennings and Nelson have devoted most of this album to other people's material. Only three songs are their own.

Of the original songs, "I Can Get Off On You" is the best. Written by both Waylon and Willie, the song has already gotten some airplay on country stations, along with "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up To Be Cowboys."

TWO SONGS on "Waylon and Willie" were written by Kris Kristofferson, "Don't Cuss the Fiddle" and "The Year 2003 Minus 25". The latter has some great lyrics; it's a redneck version of "Eve of Destruction." More than any of their songs, it really makes clear the image with which Jennings and Nelson sell so many records.

Now that the radicals of the '60s have become quiet and respectable, Waylon and Willie are the hippies of the '70s. They like Lone Star Beer, women, and country-rock; they dislike government, jobs, and the Arabs who are buying the U.S. of A. If you've written them off as corny country-music hicks, give them another listen. A lot of people like their music and like what they say.

Jennings and Nelson chose their material well on the album, and only "Gold Dust Woman" lacks anything. For those of you who have spent the last year on a deserted island, "Gold Dust Woman" was written by Stevie Nicks, and was the sixth (or was it the seventh?) hit of Fleetwood Mac's "Rumours."

AS IF the song hadn't already been played to death, a new version doesn't help matters any. The new arrangement adds little to the song, and Jennings' vocal doesn't hold a candle to Nicks'.

Overall, "Waylon and Willie" is a fine album. You can bet it'll sell a couple million, since they could sneeze for three minutes and have a hit single.

"Waylon and Willie" won't open up new musical paths; it lacks the originality for that. It will, however, entertain people. If you aren't too sophisticated to drink a few beers and be a good ol' boy, you'll probably enjoy the album.

'Cabaret' celebrates life; Minnelli, Grey superb

By JIM CHALFANT
Collegian Reviewer

"Cabaret" is one of the most delightful films around, and probably the best thing you'll see at the Union all semester. Set in Berlin in 1931, the film combines great song and dance numbers with romance, drama, and comedy.

"Cabaret" stars Liza Minnelli as Sally Bowles, an American girl who performs at a burlesque-type bar, the Kit-Kat Club. For her, the club and the night life it offers is a way of life, much more fun than real life outside the club.

Outside, the Nazi party is beginning its rise to power, by attacking Jews and Communists. Outside, also, is Brian Roberts (Michael York), who wants to marry Bowles. Just as she fears reality in general, however, she also fears the particular reality of marriage and housework. The cabaret offers peace, where she can cling to her dream of becoming an actress.

Joel Grey nearly steals the show as the master of ceremonies at the club. His performance in several burlesque numbers is very good, but his real importance in the film is when he addresses the audience, challenging them to leave the world behind at the cabaret.

AT THE same time, he laughs at the audience, mocking their real-world follies. Director Bob Fosse uses Grey's performances well to comment on life in general. Especially powerful is the love song Grey sings to a girl dressed as a gorilla. "If you could see her through my eyes," he sings, "she wouldn't even look Jewish."

The action then moves to a scene between Fritz Wepper and Marisa Berenson, as a young Jewish couple. Using this couple, the film deals with the fears of Jews in Nazi Germany.

"Cabaret" is almost too complex to describe. For all the comments like the one above it makes on the Nazi party, it's also a great musical love story. You can watch the film as a sad and serious drama, and follow the contrasts between the cabaret and the real world, or you can watch it as if it's "Oklahoma" or "The Sound of Music."

THE FILM won eight Academy Awards, and it probably deserved five or six more. From the excellent photography and Fosse's fine direction, to the excellent acting by all, to John Kander's music and Fred Ebb's lyrics, "Cabaret" is one big masterpiece.

The film will surprise you if you've never seen it. While most musicals get a little boring between songs, "Cabaret" has enough enjoyable scenes in it to make two movies. Even the songs are unique.

In fact, considering the film's PG rating, the music and dancing gets a little bit kinky. It's all done in fun, however, and so is the film. Even with all its cynicism, "Cabaret" celebrates life. As the song says, "Life is a cabaret, old chum, come to the cabaret." You won't regret it a bit.

Enunciation not enough to win

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

The K-State speech squad went to Ottawa University last weekend to compete against 12 schools from Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri.

Team members performed well, according to Lynne Ross, coach, as they influenced the judges with their individual styles and creative topics.

"They did really well," Ross said. "This enables them to qualify for the National Forensic Contest."

Bob Holcomb, sophomore in business and pre-law, placed first with his informative speech. He said his speech was about the game "Monopoly."

K-State has a good speech team, according to Holcomb, and he said there were a few good other teams in the meet at Ottawa.

"It's (the speech tourney) something to do. It's fun and a good learning experience," he said.

ROBIN REESE, a sophomore in accounting and pre-law, placed fifth for her interpretative piece.

She said there is terrific competition between K-State and Bethel.

"Our toughest competition was from Bethel," she said. "Wherever we go, we seem to be competing against each other a lot."

When comparing speech activities in high school and college,

Reese said high school tournaments were more lenient.

"It's (college tourneys) a lot different from high school. Tournaments are more difficult to do well in, she said.

"Competition is a lot stiffer here. In high school, sometimes you only do two events at one tournament."

Reese said speakers at K-State can have a maximum of six events at each tournament. This amount of activity keeps the team busy, she said.

ACCORDING to Ross, Reese has placed in finals at three other tournaments: Oklahoma Christian College, Johnson County Community College and Bradley University in Illinois.

Linda Treiber, freshman in theater, also did an oral interpretative speech and placed forth.

Treiber said she did a prose reading from the book, "I Never Promised You a Rose Garden." She selected two episodes in the book, one which depicted the character's role of insanity and the opposite role, reality.

Todd Sherlock, a junior in public relations and business, placed second with his informative speech on "McDonald's."

Sherlock said speech tourneys can be compared to athletics with all of the competition involved.

He said many interesting and informative speeches were presented at Ottawa.

HE SAID he has six trophies so far and they are all on display in the speech department.

Sherlock admires Ross, saying how she has a binding effect on the team and respects each member's originality.

"She's probably one of the best coaches in the nation," he said. "K-State ranked fifth in the nation last year. She had a lot to do with that."

His after-dinner speeches have a humorous twist, he said, but are always done with a serious point behind them.

ON ONE such occasion, Sherlock said he opened his jacket which was lined with worms in cellophane bags, and proceeded to speak about the worms' resourcefulness.

The team has accomplished much both individually and collectively, according to Sherlock. He said the University should be given credit for the amount of attention it has given the team.

"Everyone on the team, the coaches, and everyone else associated with it are tremendous," he said. "A lot of credit has to go to the University for sponsoring us and letting us go to tournaments."

Brownback adds new fieldhouse plan

By DOUGLASS DANIEL
SGA Editor

A four-point plan which would increase full-and part-time student fees up to $5 per semester to raise money for a new fieldhouse at K-State has been proposed by Sam Brownback, candidate for student body president.

Brownback's proposal would increase student fees up to $5 per semester, begin the fee increase in 1980, call a meeting of representative from University-related groups to get commitments from groups for funds and assess a user's tax on tickets sold to be used for maintenance and operational costs of the complex.

Terry Matlack, student body president, had made a proposal to increase full-time student fees $10 and part-time student fees $5 to raise money for a new fieldhouse. Matlack's proposal would start increasing fees in fall 1978.

BROWNBACK SAID he proposes an increase of up to $5 because it would raise a significant amount of money from the students to begin a drive for funds.

An increase up to $5 would also have flexibility in case funds from other sources such as large legislative funds or large donations are available, Brownback said.

"If we can get significant funds from other sources, the students would have a way out by the reading of up to $5," he said.

Brownback said the fee increase would not go into effect until 1980 so there will be time to confer with interested groups about the building of a fieldhouse so definite pledges can be made before student money is taken.

"Students don't want to stick their necks out if no other groups have pledged funds," he said.

A MEETING should be called of representatives of K-State students, University Alumni Association, University Endowment Association, the City of Manhattan, the state of Kansas, the federal government, Riley County businessmen and any other groups that would be interested in the construction of a fieldhouse and in pledging funds toward the project, Brownback said.

A user's tax on tickets sold to events in the new fieldhouse should be imposed to raise money to maintain the facility so student funds are not constantly used for maintenance, Brownback said.

"It's a responsibility of the people using the complex to maintain it," he said.

Brownback said his proposal is palatable for all students. While students shouldn't pay more than other groups for the project, students would put in their fair share, he said.

"This is going to give students a viable plan that isn't going to cost them an arm and a leg," Brownback said.

Brownback said if his proposal is considered by student senate, it should go before the student body in the form of a referendum.

Painting continues in Derby facelift

By DIANE JOHNSON
Collegian Reporter

Redecorating of Derby Food Center is expected to be completed this spring.

Workers must finish painting and electrical wiring before the redecorating will be complete, according to Jean Riggs, associate director of housing.

Riggs said they started planning the project three years ago.

Antique furniture and three oriental paintings have been added to the Gold Room, she said.

Plants and new drapes were purchased for the Garden Room in Derby and the walls were painted, Riggs said.

Riggs said graphic designs are being painted on the walls in some of the Derby dining areas. The designs were created by Linda Hoffman, who was a senior in interior design at K-State last year.

"Because of the fire code, there aren't many windows in Derby," Riggs said. "We wanted to brighten it up so we are using these graphic designs. There were a lot of blank walls before."

RIGGS SAID in the future they want to add wall hangings and lamps in the dining areas in Derby.

"Wicker lamps are to be hung in the Garden Room eventually," she said.

But according to Riggs, there are problems in designing the food centers.

"In the big halls, we have to plan on a long-term basis," Riggs said. "We can't afford to repaint too often—it has to last ten to 15 years."

Riggs said this is the first interior decorating that has been done in Derby Food Center.

"We try to work with people who know about interior design," Riggs said. "We have to be careful with the colors we use—they have to go with the tile and the drapes."

Riggs said they haven't done much drapery replacement because of the expense.

THE RESIDENTS act differently when they see work being done to improve the dining rooms, Riggs said.

"The designs make it less institutionalized," Riggs said.

Acceptance into vet school difficult for 600 applicants

By LYNN BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

The K-State College of Veterinary Medicine, with a nationally recognized program, consistently has more applicants than can be accepted into its program.

Approximately 600 students submit applications each year, said John Noordsy, assistant dean of veterinary medicine.

There are consistently 1,000 students enrolled in the pre-vet program at K-State, a figure which includes both in-state and out-of-state students, Noordsy said.

Only 105 students per year are selected from the pre-vet program to join the college of veterinary medicine, he said.

THIS NUMBER is higher than last year because the new veterinary medicine building has been completed, Noordsy said. Until this year only 100 students were selected each year, he said.

Only Kansas residents and students from one of the 12 states and Puerto Rico which have a signed contract with the K-State College of Veterinary

'This committee is made up of five experienced and diversified faculty members looking for things other than grades...'

Medicine may be considered for admission to the college, according to Noordsy.

These states which have contracts with K-State are Arizona, Arkansas, Hawaii, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming.

Noordsy said there are no minimum number of students from each of these states that must be selected, but there is an upper limit.

PRE-VET students wishing to apply for veterinary school must first complete a required 64 hours in a pre-vet program with a minimum grade point average of 3.0, Noordsy said. The last 45 additional hours of undergraduate work must also be completed with a 3.0, he said.

A student may apply for admission to the college of veterinary medicine prior to finishing the required number of hours but he is required to finish these hours during the spring semester of that same year.

After application to the college, only a small drop in the student's GPA is allowed for him to be considered in the final selection, Noordsy said.

Each student who submits an application for admission to the College of Veterinary Medicine is interviewed by a committee selected by the college.

"This committee is made up of five experienced and diversified faculty members looking for things other than grades," Noordsy said.

Some of the qualities the committee looks for in an applicant are his communication ability, his ability to handle situations under stress, his background with veterinary medicine and related activities, his motivation and his maturity, Noordsy said.

An applicant's grades, application and interview are weighed equally in the selection of students who are invited to enter the college, Noordsy said.

THERE ARE no specific questions in the interview that are weighed heavier than others, he said.

"Everybody on the committee votes a little differently and has different questions he weighs heavier than other questions," Noordsy said.

The committee members decide what questions to ask an applicant according to the information the applicant gives on his application sheet, Noordsy said.

The committee is given the application one week before the interview is scheduled. During this time, each committee member decides what specific questions he would like to ask the applicant, he said.

No information pertaining to the applicant's grades is given to the committee and the committee does not choose applicants on the basis of race, sex, stature or other similar qualities, Noordsy said.

Invitations to enter the college are issued entirely on a student's merit which is determined by the application, interview and grade point average, Noordsy said.

ALSO, THE number of women applying and being accepted to the College of Veterinary Medicine has been increasing rapidly in recent years. The past class was approximately 25 percent women.

The selection of students to be invited to enter the College of Veterinary Medicine is made in the spring, although this selection is a tentative selection. Final selection is not made until all spring semester grades are turned in and checked, he said.

"The advising from the College of Agriculture, the College of Arts and Sciences and the veterinary deans' office generally advises that all pre-vet students pursue a concurrent degree program while pursuing their pre-vet requirements," Noordsy said, since so few pre-vet students may be accepted each year.

There are no restrictions placed on graduating veterinary students concerning where they may practice or what type of practice they may set up.

"Ideally, since this is a state sponsored school, they will stay in the state and fill the gaps in places where they are needed the most," Noordsy said.

Vet building will be ready for classes in July

By LYNN BASTIAN
Collegian Reporter

The third K-State veterinary medicine building is almost complete. It will be the last building in the series of three which comprise the new facilities for the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The building should be complete by July, said John Noordsy, assistant dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Four departments will be located in the new building including the Surgery and Medicine Department, the Diagnostic Laboratory, the Extension Services and the Pathology Department, Noordsy said.

The move to the new veterinary medicine building will make a large difference in the way classes are taught by the Surgery and Medicine Department, according to Jacob Mosier, professor of surgery and medicine.

THE NEW building will accommodate 100 students in each class and 31 faculty members, Mosier said. Dykstra was built to accommodate 55 students in each of the four classes in the veterinary medicine program and 12 to 15 faculty members.

"The real asset of moving to the new building will be the great improvement in the students environment for learning," Mosier said.

The students will have more space to work in, with fewer students assigned to each teacher, Mosier said.

The students and teachers will also benefit from the extra space by having improved facilities to handle food animals. The improved facilities will alleviate some of the hazards students and instructors are currently facing when moving and restraining animals, he said.

"The excellent facilities will help offset the salary difference between Kansas and some of the other states," he said.

THE DEPARTMENT will also have space to expand its specialty departments such as veterinary ophthalmology, dermatology and neurology, he said.

Another program that will be expanded is the residence training and graduate training programs. There were not enough research laboratories available to expand these programs in the past, he said.

The department will also expand its research program, with a special emphasis being placed on food animals, Mosier said.

"We try to be as responsive as we can to the people in Kansas so our research is centered on their needs," Mosier said.

There will be approximately 50 percent more hospital space for the small animals and 33 percent more space for the large animals, Mosier said.

There will be enough examining rooms that a student can spend more time with the animals, he said.

For the first time, the veterinary hospital will meet American Animal Hospital Association standards, Mosier said.

THESE STANDARDS dictate a certain amount of exercising space, ventilation, surgery prep areas, surgery rooms, recovery rooms and intensive care rooms for the animals. Dykstra did not meet these specifications in the areas of surgery rooms and exercise facilities, Mosier said.

The veterinary medicine program will be evaluated for accreditation this month, Mosier said.

"We will be glad to see the accreditation inspectors come," he said.

The Surgery and Medicine Department expects to be moved into the new building by the first of July.

The diagnostic laboratory will also be located in the new veterinary medicine building, Harry Anthony, director of the diagnostic laboratory, said.

"The major advantage to the move is that we will be adjacent to the pathology department and close to the animal hospital," Anthony said.

THE DIAGNOSTIC laboratory examines specimens from sick animals and makes the diagnosis and receives specimens from every county in Kansas as well as surrounding states.

The move will allow them extra room to expand their diagnostic procedures and offer a more complete diagnostic service.

The move to the new building will also be an asset to the livestock producers who use the services of the diagnostic center, Anthony said.

"Everything is spread out right now," Anthony said. "But when we move into the new building, everything will be located together."

The laboratory offers a program where small groups of seniors spend time with an instructor in lab work.

"With the extra facilities we can avail the lab to more students for a greater length of time," Anthony said.

THERE WILL be some increase in the staff due to expansion of programs, and the new building is built to allow for this expansion, he said.

"We will be able to enhance disease control and herd health programs for the livestock industry," Anthony said.

The extension services will also be moving to the new veterinary medicine building.

"This service is responsible for the post-graduate and continuing education programs for livestock producers in Kansas and surrounding states as it pertains to veterinary medicine," Homer Caley, state leader in extension veterinary medicine, said.

The service plans to expand its involvement in the post-graduate program in Kansas, he said.

The extra space in the new building will allow them to conduct training classes for the veterinarians involved in continuing education at the same time regular classes are being held, Caley said.

"We will not be limited in time and effort by classes," Caley said.

EXTENSION SERVICES will also have facilities for conferences with small groups of producers from surrounding communities who wish to speak with them concerning specific problems, he said.

The final department relocating in the veterinary medicine building is the department of pathology.

The new building will give the department the capacity to do some of the things they do not have the facilities for at the present time, Stan Dennis, head of the pathology department, said.

FLASHLIGHT EXAMINATION...A fireman examines the ceiling of the Vintage Studio, 1114 Laramie, where a fire Wednesday afternoon damaged part of a work room.

Fire damages work room of local photography studio

A cigarette touched off a fire which damaged half of a work room at Vintage Studio, 1114 Laramie, late Wednesday afternoon.

According to Mike Mullins, studio owner, the fire was caused by fumes from lacquer he was spraying on a photograph.

Mullins said the fumes reached a cigarette burning in an ashtray four feet from where he was working and ignited the flame.

The fumes usually are eliminated by an exhaust fan in the 10 by 20 foot back room.

The flame quickly spread up the wall of the room destroying the exhaust fan, several ceiling panels, a paper wall hanging and several business orders. Smoke also damaged several items in the room, Mullins said.

MULLINS SAID his partner, David O'Dell grabbed a fire extinguisher and started to spray the flame.

Mullins called the fire department about 4 p.m., ran to nearby Raoul's Restaurant and obtained another extinguisher to help O'Dell fight the fire.

Two Manhattan fire trucks arrived at the studio about three minutes after Mullins made the call, he said.

"By the time the fire department got here we had it (the fire) under control," he said.

Firemen entered the studio with hoses and quickly dispatched the fire, Mullins said.

Mullins said he could not guess how much damage the fire caused but said the work at the studio would slow down while repairs were made.

Fuel supply still adequate despite extra-cold weather

TOPEKA (AP)—Kansas has adequate supplies of fuel despite a prolonged cold spell which has kept temperatures below normal this winter, state Energy Director Steven Harris said Wednesday.

However, Harris urged Gov. Robert Bennett to encourage voluntary energy conservation by citizens to deal with potential continued cold weather the rest of the winter.

"Despite a 25 percent colder-than-normal January and 10 percent colder-than-normal winter to date, natural gas and alternate fuel supply systems in Kansas are adequately coping at this time with little or no noticeable adverse economic or social impact," Harris said in a letter to the governor.

HARRIS, who is chairman of the state Energy Emergency Management Task Force, is charged with delivering to the governor a monthly report on the status of state fuel supplies.

"The possibility still exists, however, that sustained periods of extremely cold weather could pose deliverability problems for some natural gas pipelines," Harris said.

"Contacts with major gas suppliers will be maintained, particularly during colder than normal weather. Further, the diminishing cold supply in the East for power generation purposes may eventually (have an) impact on Kansas. In light of the continuing cold weather and the coal strike, voluntary energy conservation measures by all Kansans should be urged at this time," he said.

HARRIS said some large industrial customers are having their natural gas supplies curtailed. But most of the users have been accustomed to curtailments during peak winter months and are able to deal with the problem, he said.

Teamsters president, others sued in pension, loan scandal

WASHINGTON (AP)—Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons and 18 other former officials of the union's troubled Central States Pension Fund were sued Wednesday in a Labor Department effort to recover millions of dollars in allegedly bad loans.

They were accused of having "caused great financial harm" to the $1.7 billion fund and its 480,000 beneficiaries through "a series of questionable loan transactions."

Some of the loans were made to individuals linked to organized crime and were used to finance gambling casinos, race tracks and risky real estate ventures, government officials said.

Although Labor Secretary Ray Marshall acknowledged that the losses could involve tens of millions of dollars, he indicated little hope of recovering the full amount.

"I expect to get as much as we can ..." he said, but "obviously if there are no assets, you can't get blood out of a turnip."

The Labor Department's civil suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Chicago, culminated a massive investigation of the Central States fund begun in 1975 following reports of mismanagement and alleged ties to organized crime.

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or a senior majoring in math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate-Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll receive an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost you thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you. And at the end of the year of training, you'll receive a $3,000 cash bonus.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have qualified for an elite engineering training program. With unequaled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and gilt-edged qualifications for jobs in private industry should you decide to leave the Navy later. (But we don't think you'll want to.)

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on February 6-10, or contact your Navy representative at 816-374-2376 (collect). If you prefer, send your résumé to the Navy Nuclear Officer Program, Code 312-B468, 4015 Wilson Blvd., Arlington, Va. 22203, and a Navy representative will contact you directly. The NUPOC-Collegiate Program. It can do more than help you finish college: it can lead to an exciting career opportunity.

HE ALSO PLAYS DEFENSE...In addition to breaking the Big Eight career scoring record, Mike

Evans (12) was part of a K-State defensive effort that forced 24 Iowa State turnovers last night.

Evans sets mark; 'Cats shut-off Cyclones, 74-63

By LEANN WILCOX
Collegian Reporter

You can talk about Mike Evans breaking the Big Eight career scoring record. Or you can talk about Curtis Redding regaining his scoring form.

And you have to mention Steve Soldner offsetting Dean Uthoff, as well as the defensive play of Scott Langton.

But what it all boils down to is that by beating the league-leading Iowa State Cyclones, 74-68, last night in front of a packed Ahearn Field House crowd, the K-State Wildcats showed they may finally be fulfilling their potential.

Enthusiastic defensive play was a big factor in the 'Cats' win.

"I thought we played a real fine ball game. It was a tremendous defensive game," Coach Jack Hartman said.

Sports

Scott Langton led the defensive charge with six steals as K-State forced Iowa State to commit 24 turnovers.

ROLANDO BLACKMAN had three steals, and Redding and Evans had two apiece as K-State bewildered the Cyclones by bouncing from a man-to-man to a 2-1-2 zone defense.

Redding, Soldner, Evans and Blackman shared the K-State scoring effort.

Redding popped from long range and he also drove the lane to pick up 22 points.

"It sure feels good to play good again," Redding said. "I was going to the basket looking for the score."

After a 33-33 first half tie Redding put the 'Cats ahead for good, two minutes into the second half.

EVANS' BREAKING the Big Eight scoring record gave the game added significance. With 3:29 left in the first half he hit a pressured 15-foot jumper from the right side, to break the record Colorado's Cliff Meely set in three years.

"I think that was an appropriate time," Evans said referring to the shot. "It kind of broke the game open for us." Evans went on to score 16 points in the game.

Wildcat fans showed their appreciation of Evans' feat by giving him a five-minute ovation. They also displayed a banner which read "Alright Mike, You're Number One."

Redding was also given a message by the fans. A sign saying "We Love You Curtis" appeared with about 10 minutes to play. Curtis smiled.

Allen selected Ram's coach

LOS ANGELES (AP) — George Allen took over again as coach of the Los Angeles Rams Wednesday, saying that getting to the Super Bowl was the No. 1 objective and adding, "I don't think we have to get there this year, but that is certainly our goal."

Owner Carroll Rosenbloom earlier had announced that Allen, who coached the Rams from 1966-70, would be returning to the job from which he actually had been fired twice. The late Dan Reeves, who owned the Rams at that time, dismissed Allen in 1969 but brought him back amid objections to the firing from players and fans.

A coach returning to a team from which he has been fired is highly unusual. Lou Saban did it at Buffalo, but there are no other modern parallels.

THE NEXT year Allen was fired again and went to Washington, where he headed the Redskins seven seasons.

The 56-year-old Allen has 12 years of head coaching experience in the National Football League and had been both coach and general manager at Washington.

Rosenbloom refused to disclose Allen's salary, but said he had signed a multiyear contract.

Chuck Knox, who guided the Rams to five consecutive National Football Conference division titles, quit under pressure. He has been hired as coach of the Buffalo Bills.

Much of the criticism of Knox centered on what many considered a lackluster offensive performance. The criticism reached a climax when the Rams lost to Minnesota 14-7 in the opening round of the 1977 Super Bowl playoffs.

ALLEN compiled a 49-17-4 record with the Rams in his five years here and earned playoff berths in both 1967 and 1969.

The initial playoff appearance was the Rams' first title in a dozen years.

DR The Cabinet of Caligari

THE CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI has often been cited as the foremost example of expressionistic cinema. A bit of Edgar Allen Poe and medieval folklore punctuate the plot, which begins in a tiny German town. It is the story of murder and madness, kidnapping and suspense. A series of murders occur, predicted by a fortune-telling somnambulist. Caligari falls under suspicion. Said film critic Arthur Knight, "To suggest that what we see are the ravings of a madman, Wiene deliberately adopted stylized settings—great angular shadows painted a deep black, streets and walls and sky all starkly white ... (actor Krauss) creates a figure of such sinister malignance as has rarely been equalled on the screen ... a unique picture ... its influence was inestimable ..."

The Sports Staff

The name of this column, as you can see, is "No Cheers from the Pressbox." Not cheering from the pressbox is a rule that's been around for a long time in the sports world.

It's a nice rule, but with fans like me and Athletic Director Jersey Jermier sitting in the basketball pressbox, it's usually broken about once a game.

There's usually a bad call against K-State or an unbelievable play that will get me excited and I'll yell about half a word before I realize I'm sitting with a bunch of unemotional, veteran sports-watchers.

No cheers from the pressbox

Jermier has the same problem remembering that cheering is taboo, and he usually finishes most of the sentences I start.

THIS COLUMN will be written by the six people who make up the Collegian sports staff. Our purpose will be to report and to comment, not to get mad when Curtis Redding shoots a 30-footer and misses, not to forget that Jack Hartman is mortal, not to make up excuses for a losing football team, not to forget that at least 90 guys on that football team are out there busting their tails every day, and not to be satisfied with an administration that puts off a fieldhouse while K-State's basketball fortunes sink slowly into the west.

Leading off and playing shortstop for our sports staff is Cindy Cox. Cindy is a native of Silver Lake, the birthplace of the legendary Lon Kruger. With a hometown hero like that, you know she's a big basketball fan.

CINDY'S ALSO a K-State cheerleader. I can't wait till she writes about a player doing well and somebody shouts about conflict of interest.

LeAnn Wilcox is the other female on the staff. LeAnn is recovering from a knee injury that knocked her off the varsity basketball team this season.

She knows something about what it's like to study and play a varsity sport at the same time. She'll also make sure women's sports receive the coverage they deserve.

Staff member Jim Gibbons is your typical sports nut. He looks like one of those guys who actually memorizes batting averages. I've been afraid to ask him if he does.

WHILE moonlighting for the Collegian, Dick Wagner also is a sportswriter for the Topeka Daily Capital. Dick knows K-State sports inside-out, and he's shown he's not afraid to ask the questions coaches don't like to hear.

Kevin Bahner is the assistant sports editor. Being an intramural participant himself, Kevin knows that K-State students take their intramural sports seriously.

We won't give the score of every intramural game played, but we will try to remember there are other jocks on this campus besides the ones who receive an education in return for playing.

THE SPORTS editor is a typical has-been who never was. I played some basketball in high school and some soccer in junior college, which means I'm an ex-jock like thousands of other guys who roam this campus.

The main thing we'll bring to this column is a love of sports. We'll try to balance being fans with the gung-ho cynicism that infects the rest of the Collegian newsroom.

In this column we'll think, "Go! State! Go!" We just won't say it out loud.

Intramural officiating program found beneficial in development of referees

By MARY JO WOBKER
Collegian Reporter

So far there hasn't been much griping about the officiating of intramural basketball games.

But some Recreational Services employees anticipate complaints will increase as the season continues.

"We haven't heard much yet, but we don't get a lot (of complaints) until playoffs — until it's do or die," said Jody Garrison, junior in recreation, and a Recreational Services supervisor.

"A lot of guys come out and watch and they think they know the game, but haven't read the rule book. There are little things that make a difference. There are concepts on the different ways to call a game," he said.

THERE appears to be little difference between officiating men's and women's games.

"Men will complain more often and louder than women do, but outside of that there's no difference," Max Knopp, a third-year referee said.

"A lot of guys think a woman shouldn't be refereeing a men's game," said Mechelle Armstrong, a second year official.

"The guys that complain are the ones that show they don't know the rules. Probably half the players out there don't know the rules," Armstrong said.

SOME conflict can be attributed to players expecting too much from officials, according to Gary Sanders, a senior in political science.

"Some players expect the students who are officiating to be professionals or to have professional experience. They fail to realize it's their peers doing the work."

Sanders has officiated for three years and says basketball officiating is a good part-time job.

Referees begin at $2.65 per hour. Their salaries increase each year they officiate.

IT'S NOT easy to become an intramural official, according to Raydon Robel, Recreational Services director.

"We put them through a training period. We set up clinics, provide rule books and audio-visual materials.

"After going through this they have to take a test. First-year officials have to pass the test with an 85 percent or better, before we put them on the court.

"The people who are coming back, we expect them to pass with even better grades of 90 to 95 percent," Robel said.

"We're concerned about a quality program, thus a lot of time is spent trying to train officials," he said.

REGARDLESS of the kind of sport, spectators and players are going to have some complaints, Robel said.

"We try to listen to their complaints and if there is something we can do about it, fine," he said. But if the complaint is not legitimate "there's not much we can do about it."

State farmers attack unfair leveling off of tax

TOPEKA (AP)—Kansas farm men and women sharply attacked what they charged is discrimination in the imposition of personal property taxes in testimony before the Assessment and Taxation committee of the Kansas House Wednesday.

Viola Dodge, Olsburg, drew commendation and applause from members of the manner in which she stated the case. She said farmers would be satisfied if they were treated the same as businessmen. She suggested that farm machinery be depreciated 10 per cent per year and then after 10 years, "just forget about it." She maintained this is done with the equipment of businesses.

SHE was one of a group of witnesses testifying on behalf of a bill to provide a refund on personal property taxes paid by farmers and ranchers.

Rep. Denny Burgess (R-Wamego), principal sponsor of the bill, said he had it prepared to provide a maximum refund of $400.

But after hearing some of the testimony Wednesday, Burgess told the committee the $400 figure is not large enough.

"Some of these people are paying $3,000 to $4,000 in personal property taxes," Burgess said.

He said ultimately he would like to see personal property taxes on farmers and ranchers done away with. Household personal property taxes were abolished a few years ago by constitutional amendment.

BURGESS said his bill would provide for the refunds to come from the state and that the financial base of the counties would not be disturbed.

He said he has not yet been able to obtain a fiscal note on the probable cost of the measure, but added:

"The fiscal note would be small compared to nothing to eat."
Richard Mertz, Wamego farmer, said the bill needs to go a bit farther, "but it is something and we need everything we can get."

Mertz said he is unable to understand how the equipment of farmers is appreciating in value for tax purposes when equipment of businesses is depreciating.

Virgil Huseman, representing the Kansas Livestock Association, said that organization is not a proponent of the bill because "it is just a bandaid on a larger problem."

He said the livestock organization is backing legislation to increase the state sales tax to offset doing away with the tax on livestock and business inventories and the sales tax on food.

Clergymen battle over death penalty; committee hears differing opinions

TOPEKA (AP)—A difference of opinion among churches on the death penalty Wednesday led one clergyman to compare a Senate hearing with a religious war.

"I feel I'm in Northern Ireland, church against church," said Rev. Richard Wempe of Shalom House, a Catholic group in Kansas City, Kan.

Wempe, and representatives from several other Catholic groups urged the Federal and State Affairs Committee of the Kansas Senate not to reinstate capital punishment in Kansas. Spokesmen for Baptists urged restoration of the death penalty.

"The spirit of the Gospel places great value both on the dignity of the individual person and on life itself," Wempe said. "We believe that life is sacred and is not to be destroyed by man at any stage of its journey—neither through abortion, nor euthanasia, through war nor capital punishment," he said.

Leading Baptist clergymen in support of the death penalty was the Rev. Herman Van Arsdale speaking on behalf of the Kansas Baptist Convention.

"Kansas Baptists have always been ambivalent toward this issue, but because of the trends in society toward anarchy, they feel society must be protected against criminals who commit heinous crimes of death," he said.

Salina Police Chief John Woody joined the preachers in a call for restoration of capital punishment, saying it deters crime and protects society.

"When you go by those cemeteries, that's not vengeance you hear. That's a cry for justice," Woody said. "It's time to make our stand against people who kill other people."

Woody alluded to the Tuesday afternoon stabbing death of a 24-year-old receptionist at the Chamber of Commerce in Manhattan, which he called senseless and brutal.

SHORTLY AFTER he spoke, Topeka police took into custody a man sought in connection with that killing. He was apprehended after a second woman, identified as the assailant's girlfriend, was shot and killed as she left her Topeka apartment.

"While I have stood here, somebody has died," Woody said.

Schneider awaits poll in candidacy question

TOPEKA (AP)—Attorney General Curt Schneider says he is awaiting results of an extensive poll he is having taken before announcing whether he will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor this year.

"I'm not suicidal," Schneider said this week. "I won't run unless I believe I can win."

Schneider said he assumes his poll is going to show he has slipped somewhat in popularity with voters since a similar poll he commissioned last June, and that incumbent Republican Gov. Robert Bennett has improved from what Schneider's earlier poll gave him.

THE CRITICAL issues for Schneider are how much he's gone down and how much Bennett's come up.

Schneider was generally regarded as the Democratic frontrunner until last September, when the existence came to light of pictures showing the attorney general outside a Joplin, Mo. motel with a young woman who was not his wife.

That revelation caused some of his key campaign organizers to abandon him, and his party support eroded significantly.

Schneider has doggedly kept his campaign alive, however, and most observers believe he would still win the Democratic primary election if it were held now.

Sophomore group sends applications

SPURS, a sophomore honorary for men and women, has sent applications to freshmen eligible for membership during the 1978-79 school year.

To be eligible, a student must have a 3.0 grade point average for the first semester of the freshman year.

The service organization has participated in activities this year such as the bloodmobile, a Christmas party with international students and volunteering for experiments at the Environmental Resource Center.

The organization will be celebrating the 56th anniversary of its founding on Feb. 14. With the start of the new year, they hope to find more men entering the club.

Since its beginning in 1922, SPURS was a female organization. But with the enactment of Title IX, men also were asked to join SPURS. Male participation has been increasing with eight men presently in the K-State chapter.

THE REASON, party sources say, is that Schneider has not been damaged all that much in the public's eye, and his potential rivals for the nomination have not caught on as they had hoped.

An aide to Schneider has confided to newsmen that the 33-year-old attorney general may announce his candidacy in his hometown of Coffeyville around Washington's birthday, Feb. 22.

Schneider has continued to make frequent public appearances, talking mainly about consumer protection to senior citizens, and biding his time to see the long-range effect of the Joplin incident.

No additional stories relating to his activities have come to public light, despite the prediction last September by former state Democratic Chairman Norbert Dreiling that the picture episode was "just the tip of the iceberg."

Schneider said at the time there was nothing wrong or indiscreet about his being seen with the young woman, and his wife, Barbara, has steadfastly stood by him.

Fieldhouse referendum to students

By THE SGA STAFF
Student Senate passed a bill last night establishing a referendum to increase full- and part-time student fees to help pay for a new fieldhouse at K-State.

Under the proposal, fees will increase by $5 for full-time students and $2.50 for part-time students in fall 1979, with an additional fee increase of $5 for full-time students and $2.50 for part-time students to be assessed preceding the date contracts may be let for construction of the facility.

Student fee increases would raise about $3 million for the construction of the fieldhouse. According to the bill, $7 million in additional funds for the complex will be provided by K-State alumni and the state legislature.

TERRY MATLACK, student body president and a sponsor of the referendum bill, made changes in the bill before it was brought to the senate floor. The bill originally called for an increase of $10 in full-time student fees and of $5 in part-time student fees to begin in fall of 1978.

"What this change does is merely say we won't assess the extra increase in student fees until we know the money is there from the alumni or endowment association," Matlack said.

Matlack said the time period for fee increase to begin was changed to allow administrators more time to organize and as a compromise to opponents of the bill who thought the assessment was too soon.

Senate defeated an amendment to the bill delaying fee increases until the president of the University informed senate that other funds for the facility were available. The amendment provided if other funds were not available by July 30, 1985, no fee increases would be made.

"The only change is we begin collecting the money from the students at such a time we are sure other funds are available," said Steve Walton, arts and sciences senator and sponsor of the amendment.

MATLACK SAID he opposed the amendment because it lacked a show of initiative on the part of the student body to alumni and other groups who might contribute funds for the facility.

"If you're going to postpone it until 1981 or 1982, what's the use of having a student referendum?" Matlack said.

Senate also defeated an amendment forbidding the use of student fees from the fieldhouse increase in the architectural planning costs of the facility.

"If the student pays for any part of this at all, I want to be sure it's for the building itself," said Richard Stumph, agriculture senator and sponsor of the amendment.

Other legislation passed by senate included a constitutional amendment requiring the student body president to maintain at least seven hours of undergraduate credit or six hours of graduate to remain in office.

Brown seeks raise in defense spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Harold Brown said Thursday the United States must increase its defense spending by $56 billion over the next five years in order to stay up with Russia.

He said also that Soviet advances in satellite-destroying weapons are leaving the United States with little choice but to get into a space weapons race with Russia.

"Because of our growing dependence on space systems, we can hardly permit them to have a dominant position in the antisatellite realm," the Pentagon chief said in his annual report.

The report was issued the same day Brown went to Congress to ask for $126 billion in military spending for next year.

The total spending authority requested is up $9.2 billion from the authority voted by Congress for the current fiscal year. Brown said the Pentagon is planning for growth to a total budget of $172.7 billion in fiscal 1983 to keep the United States from falling behind Russia.

THE BUDGET request brought prompt criticism from a group of House liberals who appeared at a news conference sponsored by SANE, an organization opposed to what it says is excessive spending on defense.

"I disagree with the concept of more planes, more missiles, more tanks and larger bombs," said Rep. Fred Richmond (D-N.Y.). "We already have the capacity to defend ourselves."

"When you come up with a defense budget like that, you have to look at other areas that are being squeezed," said Rep. Tom Harkin (D-Iowa). "Look at the farmers who have been here asking for a little more for the products of their farms, and yet we can't squeeze anything out of the budget for them."

The congressmen charged that the budget was a violation of President Carter's statement during the 1976 presidential campaign that defense expenditures could be reduced by about $5 billion to $7 billion per year without danger.

Soviet-Cambodia rift grows

MOSCOW (AP)—The Soviet Union appears headed toward a final break with Cambodia, the radical Indochinese nation whose take-over by the Communists in the 1975 war was first applauded by the Kremlin.

Cambodia's border war with Vietnam, a close Soviet ally, has hastened the deterioration in relations. But Soviet diplomats had been hinting since early December—well before the border fighting peaked—that relations were headed downhill for a variety of other reasons as well.

Since 1975, Cambodia has reportedly spurned Soviet offers of economic aid, citing the Kremlin's past recognition of the pro-Western Cambodian government of Lon Nol, ousted by the Communist rebels. The Cambodian Communists never permitted the Soviets to open an embassy in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, and pulled all their diplomats out of Moscow last summer.

THE KREMLIN apparently remained hopeful the Cambodians would change their attitude. As late as last October, the Soviets sent a warm message congratulating the Cambodian leadership on its official formation of a Communist Party, and the Moscow political weekly New Times published a long article praising Cambodia's economic progress.

Barry Commoner to open spring convocation series

Barry Commoner, advocate of the socialist approach to the energy crisis, will open the spring convocation series with a lecture today at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Commoner will also meet with students and faculty at 1:30 p.m. in an open forum in Union Forum Hall.

His views on energy and economics have gained him national attention and aroused much controversy in the 1970s. In a recent book, Commoner wrote that he foresees no solution to the energy crisis without a radical alteration of American society.

"Closing Circle" and "Poverty of Power" are two of several books Commoner has written explaining his socialistic approach.

ACCORDING to John Lilley, chairman of the University's Convocations Committee and assistant dean in the College of Arts and Sciences, Commoner supports "soft" technology, such as windmills and geothermal energy rather than nuclear energy to solve the energy crisis.

"Commoner is a very dynamic

The state-controlled Soviet press has been silent on reports of massacres, plagues and famine in Cambodia.

When the long-simmering Cambodian-Vietnamese border squabble escalated late last year, the Russian media began reprinting foreign reports accusing Cambodia of aggression and of receiving help from Communist China, Moscow's arch-enemy.

The anti-Cambodia campaign in the Soviet press increased in tempo with publication last week of a photo story in the Communist Youth League newspaper accusing Cambodia of attacking "peaceful Vietnamese towns and cities," and a battlefield report carried by the official Soviet news agency Tass and published in Tuesday's editions of Pravda.

THE TASS report in the Communist Party daily accused Cambodia of persecuting citizens of Vietnamese origin and said Vietnam was giving a "resolute rebuff" to the Cambodian army.

Dole pins Gen. Torrijos with drug-trafficking tag

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Bob Dole said Thursday an "unknown source" has furnished him with apparently authentic documents from Drug Enforcement Administration files implicating Panama's chief of government, Gen. Omar Torrijos, in narcotics trafficking.

He said that if the documents are real, the DEA "willingly and knowingly" withheld them after he demanded data from its files last year concerning Torrijos' alleged drug activities.

In a speech on the Senate floor the Kansas Republican described the documents as "agent reports which refer by name to Gen. Omar Torrijos or members of his immediate family, and implicate them by name in narcotics traffic through Panama."

Dole said they were delivered to his office on Wednesday in a plain white envelope. He said he would not release the documents but demanded that the DEA make a full disclosure of data within its files concerning any Torrijos drug connections.

DOLE HAS claimed for several months that evidence of the Torrijos family in international narcotics traffic is an issue relevant to Senate consideration of the Panama Canal treaty.

After a few other "agent reports" were leaked to antitreaty senators last year, Dole asked the DEA, under the Freedom of Information Act, for information from its files on Torrijos.

"Ordinary people here (in Vietnam)," the article said, "are wondering why the current rulers of Cambodia are forcing their soldiers to carry out armed attacks on the Vietnamese countryside..."

Developments in the Soviet-Cambodian situation fit the larger picture of Soviet-Chinese rivalry. The Kremlin denied a claim Jan. 8 by President Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, that the border war was a Soviet-Chinese battle by proxy.

Benzene cancer-causing

WASHINGTON—Citing evidence that exposure to benzene can cause cancer, the government announced tightened industrial safety rules Thursday on the commonly used chemical.

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations take effect March 13.

Dr. Eula Bingham, who heads OSHA, said the action was taken because "exposure to benzene presents a cancer danger—specifically, the hazard of developing leukemia."

The Environmental Protection Agency also considers benzene a hazardous air pollutant. It estimates that some 260 million pounds of benzene is released into the air each year, primarily at gasoline storage areas and by refineries, coke ovens and automobiles.

According to figures released by the Labor Department, the standard will affect about 600,000 workers at some 150,000 work sites across the country.

More oranges poisoned

THE HAGUE, Netherlands—A Dutch Health Ministry spokesman Thursday expressed doubt Palestinian terrorists were behind the poisoning of Israeli oranges that put five Dutch children in a hospital and touched off a scare in Western Europe.

The Health Ministry spokesman in The Hague said the discovery Thursday of a contaminated non-Israeli orange in a supermarket in the southern city of Kerkrade made it "doubtful" Palestinian terrorists were involved. He said the orange was thought to be from Spain, but an investigation was under way to establish its origin "with certainty." Officials in the West German state of Baden-Wuerttemberg said they found a poisoned Spanish orange.

Dutch and West Germany authorities said the two oranges were tainted by the same mercury injection method that contaminated 14 Israeli oranges in shipments to Europe and caused the scare.

Farm strike won't go away

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Federal officials have the mistaken idea that the agriculture movement that prompted the nationwide farmers strike will disappear, Gov. Joseph Teasdale said Thursday.

Teasdale's comments, made at a news conference at Kansas City International Airport, were prompted by a three-hour meeting he and 13 officials from several other states had with President Carter earlier this week.

"The best thing was the discovery by all the governors...that, as we had all expected, (federal) leaders were of the opinion that the agriculture movement would go away if they held tight and farmers in the spring would go home and plant."

However, Teasdale said that notion is incorrect, because striking farmers are young, deeply in debt and despondent.

Take a free ride

SAN FRANCISCO—The troubled Bay Area Rapid Transit district gave free rides to all comers Thursday to atone for weeks of jammed cars and breakdowns. "It's just like stealing," one passenger chortled.

The day of free travel, estimated to cost the system $100,000, was authorized last week by BART directors to follow the end of a 69-day bus strike that forced many commuters who normally take the bus to ride the train. The Alameda-Contra Costa Transit District strike ended Jan. 29.

"It seemed like a good way to compensate riders inconvenienced by crowded cars and poor service, particularly during peak commute hours," said BART public relations manager Mike Healy.

Williams charged in second count of two murders

TOPEKA (AP)—Albert Dale Williams appeared in Shawnee County District Court Thursday on a charge of first-degree murder, the second such charge filed against him in two days.

Williams, 22, of Junction City, is charged in connection with the deaths of a young Topeka woman and a secretary at the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce building.

Shawnee County authorities said Williams would go to trial first in Topeka, where he was being held on $150,000 bond.

Williams is charged in connection with the death of Pamela Smith, 19, who was slain in an apartment parking lot.

Witnesses said Miss Smith's killer was hiding in a car when she left her sister's apartment and started walking toward her car. They said the assailant stepped out and shot her in the leg, then shot her in the head after pausing a few moments while she pleaded for mercy.

Williams is also charged in the death of Pamela Parker, 24.

Mrs. Parker, whose body was found in a utility room, was stabbed during the noon hour Tuesday as she worked in her Chamber of Commerce office.

Bring back the death penalty

The death penalty should be reinstated in Kansas—not because it may or may not be a deterrent to potential murderers—but because it is a form of justice that does, indeed, have a place in our society.

Opponents of capital punishment will harp on the point that the death penalty is not a deterrent to murder and that very few murderers will consider the penalty before killing someone in cold blood.

This is probably true.

Any person who feels he has the right to kill innocent people who have done nothing to harm him will very likely not care what happens to himself.

But the fact that the person doesn't care what happens to himself should not exempt that person from receiving his just punishment.

This is an emotional time in Kansas history due to the publication of various murder cases from across the state—bringing into the home of every citizen the grizzly details of each killing.

IT IS HARD not to be disturbed by the ferocity and cold calculation evident in some of these murders.

It is apparent that many murder victims died from attacks that are not only premeditated, but repeats of previous murders.

There is no particular age group that is more prone to be victims of murder. Any one will do—all ages, sexes and walks of life—they all die.

Therefore, they are the silent minority who are not consulted when deciding what to do with their killers.

And so we are responsible for seeing that justice is carried out for them.

Yes, it is an emotional time.

But emotions should not play a part in the decision-making of our legislators in Topeka.

Our lawmakers should consider the cold facts when deciding on the death penalty: the success rate of "rehabilitating" first-degree murderers (those who plan, lie in wait and kill their victims) is not good.

WHEN A HUMAN being of this nature is kept in captivity, the person will have several things on his mind, including: 1. escape; 2. killing his fellow prisoners and 3. the reassuring knowledge that he is a "lifer" and no matter how many more people he kills, he can receive no worse punishment.

Of all the convicted first-degree murderers executed in the history of Kansas, not one has ever killed again.

Bring back the death penalty. Bring back justice.

Respectable farm protesters

"An effete corps of impudent snobs who call themselves intellectuals..." said Vice President Spiro Agnew of the angry demonstrators marching on Washington to protest the Vietnam war.

That was in the late 60s. It is now the late 70s and demonstrations in Washington continue. Only the age and status of the participants have changed.

The protesters of the Vietnam war were young—most under 25. They were college students, drifters, individuals with a common purpose. They felt the government was wrong in continuing a senseless, costly war.

The "silent majority" regarded these young persons as threats to society. During one demonstration, a group of construction workers banded together and assaulted several demonstrators. Middle America rejoiced. The sanity and sanctity of government would be saved.

BUT AS MORE individuals took up the banner of anti-war sentiment, the government relenquished and, after the loss of 500,000 Americans, the U.S. pulled its troops out of Vietnam.

Today, the scenario is similar. Farmers, many from Kansas, have descended on Washington demanding 100 percent parity for their farm produce. On Jan. 19, the farmers stormed into the Department of Agriculture and occupied its offices for several hours. In 1968, students occupied the president's office at Columbia University. The farmers' tractors have halted the traffic in downtown Washington. Peace demonstrators halted Washington traffic in 1969. The war protesters were accused of stopping the government. Armed with printed cards which had three pennies taped to them, farmers entered supermarkets in the capital. The cards, which read, "American Ag. proudly presents to you, the American consumer, the farmer's share of your loaf of bread," were distributed to startled shoppers.

UNLIKE THE demonstrators of the 60s where police carried away thousands of demonstrators, no one has arrested these "radical" farmers.

No groups have shown up to beat up the farmers. The consensus seems to be one of support, particularly in the rural areas of America. The consensus about the Vietnam war was also one of support, yet the young people who actively showed their disillusionment were ridiculed, beaten, arrested and placed under surveillance by the FBI.

An air of calm surrounds the farmers' protests.

So, what is the difference?

The government has seldom been willing to listen to the cries of the young. If under 25, you are considered "unaware" of the hard cruelties of the world. Your income doesn't make you a heavy taxpayer, you are "easily excitable" and prone to violence. You're apathetic and don't bother to vote.

BUT THE FARMERS—now they are respectable people. They pay taxes, they work hard and arise each morning knowing they must work harder still to make ends meet; and they go to the polls and vote. If they are unhappy, we must listen to their anguished protests. After all, these are respectable American citizens.

These are the conceptions of the bureaucratic federal government. Bureaucrats listen to "honest, upright" citizens.

Letters to the editor

Collegian 'lacks objectivity'

Editor,

In response to the letter concerning the disruption in last Saturday's game, no one is going to agree that what happened was right.

It is unfortunate that a "house" got out of line. My real concern, however, is the lack of objectivity evident in the Collegian. The paper felt that objectivity warranted printing six letters condemning Mitchell's poorly written reply.

The fact that two of these letters, written by Garinger and Lewis (Haymaker 506-509), were an obvious collaboration ought to have indicated that one of the two would have been quite sufficient.

That the Collegian felt two almost duplicate letters were necessary to impress a point is an example of the fact that the paper is obviously promoting antagonism between greeks and non-greeks.

Personally, I've lived in both places, and why is it that the Collegian refuses to write about any of the facts that led me to favor the greek system?

Instead, the paper insists on printing stereotyped scenarios written by people blessed with a great deal of ignorance about the greek system.

Greeks laugh at these stereotypes, because they know they are not true.

Sadly though, because of the less than subtle favoritism indicated by Collegian editing, many non-greeks will never know this, and will continue to hold among other things, the ridiculous idea that

Wednesday night active meetings look like cult meetings.

All this makes me believe that our real enemy to understanding one another is actually our own campus newspaper.

However, if you need the Collegian's reinforcing bias to make you feel comfortable living where you are now, don't listen to me—I suppose the paper is actually doing you a favor.

Miller, the smut-fighter

Look.
Up in the sky.
Is it a bird? Is it a plane?
No. It's only a Miller. Vern Miller; fighter of crime; able to leap from automobile trunks in a single bound.

And what is Miller up to this week? He is fighting the forces of evil and making Kansas a cleaner place for the good people who reside here.

Miller has taken his duty from cleaning up the crime in the streets to cleaning up the news stands.

The forces of the press are impairing the minds of our children with filthy, dirty smut. What could be more filthy, dirty or smutty than the naked (gasp) body?

Fear not, good people of Kansas, Miller has come to the rescue. Even though he lost the election for the governor's office, he can still testify in support of legislation which would restrict the sale of obscene material to minors. This is a first step toward cleaning up Kansas, and one of those gargantuan bounds for possible planks on a campaign platform.

Miller, a corner stone in the statue of morality (right in there with the Pope and Carry Nation), knows what is good for the people. Let us band together with him and forever spare our children the ugliness of the naked (yechh!) body.

If not forever, at least until they are 21.

Good people of Kansas, this is a plea. Pray for Miller's success in getting this worthy legislation through, so that our children won't become depraved from the influences of such graphic publications as Playboy and National Geographic.

Help Miller teach our children how disgusting fornication and nudity really are. Help him return to the days of the Puritan Ethic, when men were men and women were women, and boys and girls didn't know why there was a difference.

Miller is over-emphasizing this nudity thing, you say. You couldn't be more wrong. Look what happened to Sodom and Gomorrah. Perhaps Miller has had a vision; a vision of all of Kansas burning to a crisp. Why? Because we, the center of the Bible Belt have let sin run rampant on the news stands. Oh God.

So, Kansas, fight with the good Vern Miller to rid the countryside of those who would sway our children's minds.

And, let's not stop at saving our minors. Let's save ourselves as well. Let's let Miller use his influence to stop smut all together. To Hell with the First Amendment (it is a dumb amendment anyway). What does the press need with all that freedom anyway? Let's let Vern tell us the things we need to know.

Stay tuned next week when Miller testifies in favor of outlawing higher education and undecaffienated coffee.

Letters to the editor

Install 'speed-bumps' in snow-covered lot

Editor,

I arrived at campus at 10 a.m. Wednesday morning with the typical parking problem ready to be faced.

The Collegian invites and encourages all readers to write letters to the editor and respond to Collegian editorial comments.

All letters must be signed and proper identification must be included. This would include title or classification, major and telephone number.

All letters must be received by noon the day before publication.

Readers may mail letters to Kedzie 103 or present them at the editorial desk in the newsroom in Kedzie Hall.

The Collegian reserves the right to select and to edit letters for length and in accordance with Collegian style.

What I found was much worse than I had expected. Cars were parked everywhere, limiting the total possible parking spaces by at least a third.

Several of these experiences have made me think of something that might help.

The idea is to lay out (install) an asphalt "speed bump" down the center of the angled parking spaces.

Unless there was a great deal of snow, the bumps would show. The cars' front wheel would roll up to the bump, touch it, and the driver would know that he had pulled up far enough.

It would also keep people from racing across the lot when it was empty.

Women flip down city streets during annual pancake race

LIBERAL (AP)—The women of Liberal will move the art of flipping light, fluffy pancakes from the kitchen to the race track again Tuesday in their 29th annual International Pancake Race.

Competitors armed with one skillet and one pancake each will take their places at the starting lines, just as their counterparts in Olney, England will do. Women at both locations will flip their pancakes, race 415 yards on an S-shaped course through main streets of the cities and flip the pancake again after they cross the finish line.

They compete against the clock and the unseen competitors across the globe, with whom they eagerly compare race times later.

Acceptance rate high

Chances good for pre-med students

By KENT GASTON
Collegian Reporter

K-State students applying for medical school usually have a better chance of being accepted than the national average, according to Bettie Dale, pre-med adviser.

"We usually have 65 to 75 percent of the students who apply get accepted," Dale said. The national average for acceptance was only 36 percent for the 1976-77 school year.

K-State's success can be attributed to several factors, including the work of Dale.

"She really has a lot to do with it (the high acceptance rate)," said David Cink, senior in pre-med and biochemistry. "She's really given me a lot of good coaching."

Cink has been accepted into the medical schools at St. Louis, the University of Kansas and Emory College in Atlanta, Ga. He's decided to attend Emory next year.

A SPECIAL adviser for pre-med students and a committee to make recommendations of pre-med students were established several years ago. The committee was formed because the KU medical school required a recommendation from a committee.

The academic atmosphere and professors are also keys to the success of K-Staters.

"The curriculum we go through here is very thorough," Cink said.

"A lot of medical school applicants get turned down because they either didn't have all of the requirements or they didn't take certain classes at the right time."

In many courses, especially biology and chemistry, some of the material is doubly important for pre-med students. K-State teachers also help pre-med students by distributing handouts which emphasize things pre-med students need to know, according to Cink.

"In many areas, the undergraduate preparation is very good at K-State," said Herbert Moser, chemistry professor and member of the pre-med committee.

"I think it's a combination of things," he said. "We have serious teachers with high standards and a serious student body."

A STUDENT'S major doesn't have much bearing on his chances of being accepted into medical school, but his dedication does, according to Dale.

"I don't think the major makes any difference," Dale said. "Whether or not a school accepts a student depends on how well he does in whatever major he has."

She said that the 25 to 35 percent of the K-Staters who aren't accepted usually change their major during their last semester and finish up in biology or chemistry. More help for K-State and other

Kansas medical school applicants may soon come out of the Kansas legislature.

Moser explained a bill was proposed which will pay for some of a student's medical school expenses, if he agrees to practice in Kansas after he graduates.

THERE IS a serious shortage of doctors in western Kansas, Moser and Cink said.

"You have to feel sorry for them," Cink said. Some towns have been searching for years to relieve the strain on their only doctor, he added.

"The problem is that rural life isn't appealing to everyone," Moser said.

Cink thought that the proposed legislation would be a good idea, because anything which will help Kansas small towns get doctors is needed.

However, he mentioned another program KU has tried which may help even more.

Med school tuition-free if doctors stay in Kansas

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas Senate passed and sent to the House Thursday two dozen measures, including one creating a state medical-education scholarship program designed to keep more young doctors in the state.

Also given final Senate passage were bills prohibiting the use of any state highway funds to back bonds for a long-proposed southeast Kansas turnpike, permitting the state to sell its share of disputed land on the Missouri border and allowing a small state income tax credit for political contributions.

The medical scholarship bill squeaked through with the necessary 21 votes. Sixteen senators voted against it, one was absent and two didn't vote.

It would provide tuition-free scholarships to medical students at the University of Kansas Medical School in Kansas City if they agreed to practice one year in the state after graduation for each year they had their tuition paid by the state.

IN ADDITION, if they agreed to practice in a designated underserved area after graduation, they also would receive a $500 monthly stipend while in school.

The bill was linked by opponents to a planned increase in tuition at the medical school from $1,150 to $3,000 annually. Foes claimed the rise was aimed at forcing more students to accept scholarships and commit themselves to service in the state. However, supporters said the Board of Regents decided to hike the tuition next school year independently of the bill.

The bill to repeal a law which would permit backing the bonds which would be sold if the southeast Kansas turnpike is ever built sailed through, 37-2. Gov. Robert Bennett vetoed the same bill last session. The new turnpike has been authorized for several years.

The Big Bumper

Gov. Robert Bennett was doing his thing Thursday at Mother's Worry, but it wasn't bending the elbow. Bennett was in Manhattan to help promote the Bump-a-thon, the annual effort to raise funds to fight muscular dystrophy. Bennett's visit helped cap off festivities, which began Tuesday morning and ended late last night.

Doctors declare open meeting bad for health hearing

TOPEKA (AP)—Spokesmen for doctors and hospitals were aligned against the news media and Common Cause Thursday at a hearing on a bill which would exempt more state agencies from provisions of the state's open meetings law.

Representatives of the health care providers argued the boards who license physicians, dentists, nurses, pharmacists and other health care professionals can do a better job if they are permitted to sift fact from hearsay in private when considering complaints about them, or studying their qualifications for licensing.

Spokesmen for the media and Common Cause said the state's open meetings law should be expanded, not tightened up, and asked what it hurts to have the public's business conducted in public.

THE BILL, sponsored by Sens. Wes Sowers (R-Wichita) and Elwayne Pomeroy (R-Topeka) would exempt the boards which license the health care providers from the open meetings law. It may come up for a vote in the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee Friday, Sen. Edward Reilly Jr. (R-Leavenworth), the chairman, said.

Jerry Slaughter, lobbyist for the Kansas Medical Society, told the committee it is "a tough issue to strike a balance between the public's right to know and the ability of a state agency to carry out its responsibility."

"If questions of a physician's fitness to be licensed come up, the agency may have to judge the validity of hearsay testimony," Slaughter said.

Craig Stock, a reporter for the Wichita Eagle-Beacon and co-chairman of the freedom of information committee of the Kansas chapter of the professional journalism society, Sigma Delta Chi, told the panel:

"Adopting this amendment, however well-intentioned, to the open meetings law can only serve to increase the flow of special interests seeking exclusion from the law's provision.

"What we'll be left with is a gutted law that doesn't deserve the name 'open' meetings law."

Mike Finamore was told he had leukemia. Nine years ago.

When Mike Finamore was thirteen years old, he was told he had leukemia.

At that time, this meant he had five, maybe six months, to live.

But just about then, leukemia research produced some dramatic results:

A special combination of drugs that would kill the leukemia cells in the blood and permit the person to live longer than ever before.

So Mike was treated. And it worked.

He didn't die.

Instead, he became one of the fortunate few to have leukemia and live. And today his weekly treatments enable him to lead a normal life.

In fact, right now he's putting the roof on a house he built himself.

And when it's finished there will be a double celebration. The new house. And Mike's 22nd birthday.

Most people expect presents. Mike's happy just to have a birthday.

Abandoned dogs wait for adoption, animal shelter is temporary home

By KAREN VINING
Collegian Reporter

There are a number of dogs to be adopted from Manhattan's animal shelter.

Last year, 581 dogs were adopted. The animal shelter had to euthanize 327 unwanted and abandoned dogs.

The dogs brought in are either picked up by the city animal warden, Dan MacKillop, or by people who no longer want the dog. Last year 1,731 dogs were admitted to the animal shelter.

So far this year there has been a 10 percent increase over last year in the number of dogs brought in. The average number of dogs admitted per day is five.

"We only admit dogs because there is no ordinance pertaining to the control of cats," said Mary Rogers, a worker at the shelter.

CATS are taken to Dykstra Veterinary Hospital at K-State.

Until last week, the shelter had only 14 cages for dogs but eleven cages have been added, bringing the total to 25.

"If an owner has a dog they want to put up for adoption, the shelter charges $7 a day. If it is a puppy litter, two or more pups, the charge is $5 a day," said Gloria, another worker at the shelter.

Gloria said she wanted to be identified only by her first name.

The charge to adopt a dog "depends on the age and where the person lives," she said.

If the person lives in Manhattan, the cost for a dog is less because part of the city tax he pays goes towards the animal shelter.

"People generally like puppies under six months old. It costs $5 for the people living within the city limits to adopt a puppy," Gloria said.

"For a dog six months and older, the charge would be $14; $5 for adoption, $4 for a rabies shot and $5 for a city tag," she said.

LAST YEAR 81 percent of the dogs brought in were adopted.

If the dog catcher picks up a dog and brings it in, the owner has 72 hours (3 days) to claim the dog. If the dog isn't claimed, it is put up for adoption. The dog is kept a total of five days. After that, it is euthanized.

The animal shelter uses a drug called T61, a barbituate. It is injected directly into the bloodstream of the animal. This slows down the heart until it stops.

"The bodies are either incinerated or buried at the city dump," Rogers said.

Any injured animal picked up by the animal warden is taken to Dykstra.

"Most are dogs hit by cars. It is the single biggest hazard," said Dr. Jacob Mosier, professor at Dykstra.

THE DOGS are cared for until they have fully recovered. Usually they are sent back to the animal shelter.

"The decision is based on the long-range hope for the dog. If it looks like it can and will be adopted, the dog will be returned to the shelter. If there is no hope for adoption, we will put it to sleep here instead of returning it to the animal shelter," Mosier said.

Dykstra uses barbituates recommended by the Euthanasia Council to put the dogs to sleep.

Dykstra usually charges the owner of the dog for the work done.

If the dog has no owner, the city is charged something for the service, but the charge is minimal.

"It is our contribution to the community," said Mosier.

Investigators of latest fire trace cause to kitchen area

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Fire investigators searching the rubble of Fanny's said the fire that destroyed the popular restaurant and discotheque Thursday appears to have begun in the kitchen area.

No injuries were reported.

"At this time, it appears the fire began toward the rear in the kitchen area," said Louis Hanson, deputy chief. He said it was possible the fire originated at the point where electrical power came into the building, near the kitchen.

Firemen battled the blaze, which also destroyed two small businesses, for most of the morning. The blaze was reported at 4 a.m. by fire fighters at a nearby station who saw billowing clouds of smoke over the area.

The Westport area is an older section of Kansas City transformed by redevelopment efforts into a shopping and entertainment area that exists alongside established neighborhoods.

The fire was the fifth major blaze Kansas City fire fighters have battled this week. Officials are still sorting through the shell of the Coates House hotel, where the bodies of at least 18 persons have been recovered and five remain missing.

Hanson said there was no evidence to suggest a relationship among the fires.

Damage at Fanny's was tentatively estimated at $700,000 to the structure and $150,000 to the contents.

With Lenny Wilkens at helm 'Sonics change into winners

SEATTLE (AP) — It's an exercise in frustration when Fred Brown allows himself to look back and try to make sense out of the turmoil and dissension that destroyed the Seattle SuperSonics last season.

By midseason, the players had become so alienated from their coach, Bill Russell, that Brown himself, the only player to survive more than five seasons with Seattle, announced that he might be happier playing somewhere else this season.

Brown didn't leave, and he's happy he didn't. In fact, he says now, he's never been more content in a Sonic uniform, adding that the current Seattle team is the best he's been on.

"I feel wonderful," Brown acknowledged after a practice this week. "This is definitely the best I've felt in a long time."

WHAT'S behind Brown's about face? Why does the veteran guard seem as excited now as the day in 1971 when the National Basketball Association Sonics made him their No. 1 draft choice?

Sports

"One thing that made it work," Brown says flatly, "was getting rid of Bill Russell. That may sound kind of hard, but it's true."

After three seasons under Russell's guidance, including the franchise's only two playoff appearances, the Sonics fell apart last season. Some of the players and Russell just didn't get along.

After witnessing the in-fighting off the court and the team's haphazard play, Sonics' owner Sam Schulman purchased the fifth and final year of Russell's $250,000-a-year contract as coach and general manager.
